MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate; within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

- "APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.
- "APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.
- "CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.
- "DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.
- "DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.
- "EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.
- "EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.
- "FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.
- "NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.
- "OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.
- "REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.
- "MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

Part I.—Principles of Criminal Liability.

SECT. 1.—THE NATURE OF CRIME IN GENERAL—DEFINITIONS.

1. Crime.—The word "crime" is a general term, & the subdivision of it is into felonies & misdemeanours (BAGLEY, J.).

The word "crime" has the same force as "offence." The proper definition of the word "crime" is an offence for which the law awards punishment. Such crimes are subdivided into three classes, treasons, felonies & misdemeanours (LITTLEDALE, J.).—MANN v. OWEN (1829), 9 B. & C. 595 ; 4 Man. & Ry. K. B. 449 ; 109 E. R. 222 ; sub nom. MAN v. OWEN, 7 L. J. O. S. K. B. 255.

2. ————(1) The proper meaning of "crime" is an indictable offence (MARTIN, B.).

(2) What then is a civil proceeding as contradistinguished from a criminal proceeding? The true test is this, if the subject-matter be of a personal character, that is, if either money or goods are sought to be recovered by means of the proceeding, that is a civil proceeding ; but, if the proceeding is one which may affect debt. at once, by the imprisonment of his body, in the event of a verdict of guilty, so that he is liable as a public offender, that is a criminal proceeding (PLATT, B.).—A.-G. v. RADLOFF (1854), 10 Exch. 84 ; 23 L. J. Ex. 240 ; 23 L. T. O. S. 191 ; 18 Jur. 555 ; 2 W. R. 566 ; 2 C. L. R. 1116 ; 156 E. R. 366.

necessary elements of a crime (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—MOGUL S.S. Co. v. MCGREGOR, GOW & Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 598 ; 58 L. J. Q. B. 465 ; 61 L. T. 820 ; 53 J. P. 709 ; 37 W. R. 756 ; 5 T. L. R. 658 ; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 455, C. A. ; affd., [1892] A. C. 25, H. L.

PART I. SECT. 1.

1 i. Crime.—Every crime is wicked & felonious.—H.M. ADVOCATE v. EDMISTON (1866), 5 Irv. 219.—SCOT.

a. Applicability of common law of England.—In criminal matters.—To Canada.—The criminal common law of England is still in force in Canada, except in so far as repealed, either expressly or by implication.—BROUSSEAU v. R. (1917), 56 S. C. R. 22 ; 39 D. L. R. 114 ; 29 Can. Crim. Cas. 207.—CAN.

b. ————To Manitoba.—When restricted.—The common criminal law of England of July 15, 1870, is the law of Manitoba saved as altered, varied, modified, or affected by the Code, or it is preserved under the Code, except in so far as it is thereby expressly or by implication repealed ; & it is operative even in case provided for by the Code unless there is such repugnancy as to cause the Code to prevail.—R. v. ELNICK, R. v. CLEMENTS, R. v. BURDIE (1920), 2 W. W. R. 606 ; 53 D. L. R. 298 ; 30 Man. L. R. 415.—CAN.

4. — Application to summary proceedings.]

—A member of an English school board was imprisoned in Ireland by a ct. of summary jurisdiction under Criminal Law & Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887 (c. 20), for unlawfully taking part in a criminal conspiracy to interfere with the administration of the law in a proclaimed district in Ireland:—Held: the member had been "punished with imprisonment for a crime" within the meaning of Elementary Education Act, 1870 (c. 75), Part I., Sched. II., r. 14.

Conspiracy is a crime in Ireland as in England. It is an offence against the Crown for which an indictment lies at common law. The circumstance that the Crown did not proceed against pltf. for conspiracy by indictment, but preferred the charge upon which he was convicted before a ct. of summary jurisdiction in Ireland, cannot alter the nature of the charge (DAY, J.).—CONYBEARE v. LONDON SCHOOL BOARD, [1891] 1 Q. B. 118; 60 L. J. Q. B. 44; 63 L. T. 651; 55 J. P. 151; 39 W. R. 288; 7 T. L. R. 4; 17 Cox, C. C. 191, D. C.

5. — Not acts legalised by statute.]—CONNOR v. KENT, GIBSON v. LAWSON, CURRAN v. TRELEAVEN, No. 808, post.

6. Criminal offence.—Avoiding payment of fare.—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 103.]—An offence under sect. 103 of the above Act for travelling in a railway carriage without having paid the fare, is a criminal offence, & the penalty recoverable under the sect. is not a "civil debt" within the terms of Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 6, nor do the provisions of sect. 35 of that Act apply in such a case.—R. v. PAGET (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 151; 51 L. J. M. C. 9; 45 L. T. 794; 46 J. P. 151; 30 W. R. 336, D. C.

Annotations:—Reid. Kennard v. Simmons (1884), 48 J. P. 225; Ex p. Newson (1911), 104 L. T. 892; & Moss (1896), 74 L. T. 551; R. v. Burrows, etc., JJ., Ex p. Wilson (1897), 77 L. T. 338.

7. — Tramways Act, 1870 (c. 78), s. 51.]

—Sect. 56 of the above Act all tolls, penalties, & charges under the Act might be recovered & enforced under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, & any Act amending the same:—Held: proceedings taken under sect. 51 of the above Act against a person for avoiding payment of fare were proceedings in respect of a criminal offence, & an action for malicious prosecution would lie against the persons taking them.

The offence amounts to a misdemeanour, & if the peculiar mode of dealing with it had not been enacted by the same statute which creates the offence, it would be punishable, upon an indictment, as a misdemeanour, & subject the offender to fine or imprisonment. It is perfectly clear to my mind that this is a criminal offence (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—RAYSON v. SOUTH LONDON TRAMWAYS CO., [1893] 2 Q. B. 304; 62 L. J. Q. B. 593; 69 L. T. 491; 58 J. P. 20; 42 W. R. 21; 9 T. L. R. 579; 37 Sol. Jo. 630; 4 R. 522, C. A.

c. Criminal proceedings.]—When a statute authorises the imprisonment of an offender against its provisions, whether it be as the primary punishment for the offence or as punishment in the last resort, the proceedings against him must be regarded as criminal.—R. v. WHITE, 2 SIDNEY (1860), 1 Q. S. R. 9.—

d. —.]—Insolvents were found guilty, under Indian Insolvency Act, s. 50, of wilfully preventing or purposely withholding the production of papers relating to their affairs, & sentenced to three months' imprisonment:—Held: the proceedings, so far as they resulted in imprisonment, amounted to a criminal case.—Re VALLABHDAS JAIRAM (1903), 1 L. R. 27 Bom. 394.—IND.

e. —.]—Accused was convicted of having in his possession without lawful authority opium without first obtaining a licence, & was condemned to pay a fine of $200 & costs & in default of payment to imprisonment. In default

U. C., [1915] 1 K. B. 800. Mentd. Knight v. North Metropolitan Tram. Co. (1898), 14 T. L. R. 286.

8. — Disobedience to bye-law.]—The Ct. of Appeal has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from a decision of the High Ct. of Justice upon a case stated by justices as to an information for contravening the bye-laws of a school constituted under Elementary Education Act, 1874 (c. 75), for the information relates to a criminal matter within the meaning of Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 47.

It is clear that the matter complained of is in truth a criminal offence, for it is disobedience to bye-laws, which are enforceable as part of the law of the land, & a person guilty of disobedience to them is liable to a penalty. This is sufficient to constitute a criminal matter; & we have no jurisdiction to hear this appeal (BRAMWELL, L.J.).—MELLOR v. DENHAM (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 467; 49 L. J. M. C. 89; 42 L. T. 493; 44 J. P. 472, C. A.

9. Criminal proceeding.—Distinguished from civil proceedings.]—A.-G. v. RADLOFF, No. 2, ante.

10. —.]—An order was made by justices directing deft. to fill up an ashpit so as to be no longer a nuisance. The Q. B. Div. made absolute a rule for a certiorari to quash the order, on the ground that it was not warranted by sects. 94 & 96 of the above Act:—Held: the order of the justices was made "in a criminal cause or matter" within the meaning of Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 47, & an appeal from the judgment of the Q. B. Div. could not be entertained.

Why is not this proceeding under the above Act a "criminal cause or matter within the meaning of Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 47? It is certainly not a civil proceeding, & it may perhaps be said that every proceeding is either civil or criminal. Therefore, independently of authority, I am disposed to hold that this is a "criminal cause or matter" (BRAMWELL, L.J.).—R. v. WHITCHURCH (1881), 7 Q. B. 20. Statutory offences—General rule.]—A person committed to prison under Solrs. Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 32, for acting as a solr. though not duly qualified, is a "criminal prisoner" within Prison Act, 1865 (c. 126), s. 4. Such a person is not entitled to be treated as a first-class misdemeanant by Prison Act, 1877 (c. 21), s. 41.

It must always be a question of the construction of the particular statute whether an act is prohibited in the sense that it is rendered criminal, or whether the statute merely affixes certain consequences more or less unpleasant to the doing of the act. If the act is prohibited in the former sense, it may be made the subject of an indictment for misdemeanour, or the statute may provide for summary proceedings either cumulatively or exclusively of the remedy by indictment (BOWEN, L.J.).—*OSBORNE v. #### SUB-SECT. 2.—MENS REA.

A. In General.

31. Implied in offence.]—(1) Intoxicating liquor was knowingly sold to a child under fourteen in a bottle, neither corked nor sealed, by a servant of a licensed person contrary to the express orders & without the knowledge of his master, who was himself in charge of the premises at the time of the sale:—Held: the licence-holder could not be convicted under Intoxicating Liquors (Sale to Children) Act, 1901 (c. 27), s. 2, of "knowingly allowing" a person to sell intoxicating liquor to a child under fourteen in a vessel neither corked nor sealed.

(2) Under ordinary circumstances an offence implies a mens rea (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).—EMARY v. NOLLOTH, [1903] 2 K. B. 264; 72 L. J. K. B. 620; 89 L. T. 100; 67 J. P. 354; 52 W. R. 107; 19 T. L. R. 530; 47 Sol. Jo. 567; 20 Cox, C. C. 507, D. C.

pression mens rea is descriptive of the state of mind which in the case of most offences must accompany the doing of the prohibited act in order to render it an offence. Such mental element varies with different offences, & in the case of each offence is only to be discovered by detailed examination of the elements of the offence.—MORFATT v. HASSETT, [1907] V. L. R. 515.—AUS.

31 ii. ———.]—There is a presumption that mens rea, an evil intention, or a knowledge of the wrongfulness of the act, is an essential ingredient in every offence.—BALDWIN v. SNOOK, [1913] 3 W. R. 314; 40 D. L. R. 333.—CAN.

Sect. 2.—Elements of crime: Sub-sect. 2, A. & B.]

32. Essential ingredient of crime.]—Deft., who was the owner & occupier of certain premises in the metropolis used for the purpose of manufacture, was summoned under Smoke Nuisance (Metropolis) Act, 1853 (c. 128), ss. 1 & 2, for negligently using a furnace in such premises so that the smoke arising therefrom was not effectually consumed. The furnace in question was constructed so as to consume its own smoke if carefully used, & the emission of smoke complained of was caused by the carelessness of the stoker employed by deft. to attend to the furnace. Deft. was not personally guilty of any negligence in connection with the matters:—Held: deft. was not criminally responsible for the negligence of his servant, & could not be convicted of the offence.

It is a general principle of our criminal law that there must be as an essential ingredient in a criminal offence some blameworthy condition of mind. Sometimes it is negligence, sometimes malice, sometimes guilty knowledge—but as a general rule there must be something of that kind which is designated by the expression mens rea. Moreover, it is a principle of our criminal law that the condition of mind of the servant is not to be imputed to the master. This principle of the common law applies also to statutory offences with this difference, that it is in the power of the legislature, if it so pleases, to enact, & in some cases it has so enacted, that a man may be convicted & punished for an offence although there was no blameworthy condition of mind about him; but inasmuch as to do so is contrary to the general principle of the law, it lies on those who assert that the legislature has so enacted to make it out convincingly by the language of the statute (CAVE, J.).—CHISHOLM v. DOULTON (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 736; 58 L. J. M. C. 133; 60 L. T. 966; 53 J. P. 550; 37 W. R. 749; 5 T. L. R. 437; 16 Cox, C. C. 675, D. C.

33. — May be dispensed with by statute.]—Prisoner was indicted, under 9 Will. 3, c. 41, s. 2, for having been found in possession of naval stores marked with the broad arrow. The jury returned a verdict that prisoner was found in possession of copper marked with the broad arrow; that they had not sufficient evidence before them to show that prisoner knew that the copper was so marked; but that he had reasonable means of knowing that it was so marked:—Held: upon these findings

33 i. Essential ingredient of crime—May be dispensed with by statute.]—The question whether or not the common law doctrine of mens rea is excluded by a particular statute is to be determined by considering the scope & subject of the statute & the various circumstances which would make the application of the doctrine reasonable or unreasonable, as well as the language of the statute.—R. v. ERSON, [1914] V. L. R. 144.—AUS.

33 ii. ——The common law doctrine that to constitute crime there must be a guilty mind applies also to offences created by statute, unless it can be deduced from the statute itself that the intention of the legislature was to exclude the application of that doctrine. The true rule for the determination of the question whether or not the application of the common law doctrine is excluded by the statute under consideration in each case is to consider the scope & object of the statute, & the various circumstances which make the application of the doctrine reasonable or unreasonable, as well as the language of the particular statute under consideration. There are three classes of cases under the statute law: (1) those in which, following the common law rule, a guilty mind must either be necessarily inferred from the nature of the act done or must be established by independent evidence; (2) those in which either from the language or scope & object of the enactment to be construed, it is made plain that the Legislature intended to prohibit the act absolutely, & the question of the existence of a guilty mind is only relevant for the purpose of determining the quantum of punishment following the offence; (3) those in which, although from the omission from the statute of the word “knowingly” or “wilfully” it is not necessary to aver in the indictment that the offence prisoner could not be convicted of the offence charged.

Mens rea is an essential ingredient in every offence. It may be dispensed with by statute; but the terms which should induce the ct. to infer that it is dispensed with must be very strong (COCKBURN, C.J.).—R. v. SLEEP (1861), Le. & Ca. 44; 30 L. J. M. C. 170; 4 L. T. 525; 25 J. P. 532; 7 Jur. N. S. 979; 9 W. R. 709; 8 Cox, C. C. 472, C. C. R.

36. ——J.—(1) Appls. were the owners & occupiers of, but did not reside on, a farm, which was managed for them by a bailiff under the superintendence of a steward who resided some considerable distance away. Part of the business of the farm was the conveyance of milk to a railway station, & for this purpose the appls. had at the farm a four-wheel van which was usually driven to & from the station by a milkman. The van had appls.’ names painted on the side, & it was constructed or adapted for use for the conveyance of milk churns in the course of appls.’ business as dairy farmers. On one occasion without the knowledge of appls. or the steward, & for his own purposes, the bailiff used the milk van, after carrying milk to the station, for bringing back his wife & others from a place of entertainment. In respect of this user appls. were convicted of keeping & using the milk van without having a licence therefor:—Held: the milk van was kept by appls., & they were responsible for its user by the bailiff on the day in question, & as such user was not for the conveyance of goods or burden in the course of trade or husbandry within Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (c. 8), s. 4 (3), the conviction was right.

37. ——J.—I view with some trepidation any tendency to diminish the importance of the rule as to mens rea which has prevailed in respect of criminal charges. There are cases no doubt where a statute makes it plain that an charged was knowingly” or “wilfully” committed, or to prove a guilty mind, & the commission of the act in itself prima facie imports an offence, yet the person charged may still discharge himself by proving to the satisfaction of the tribunal which tries him that in fact he had not a guilty mind.—R. v. EWART (1905), 25 N. Z. L. R. 709.—N.Z.

33 iii. ——Where a statute with a penalty for non-performance imposes a duty upon a person & such person fails to perform such duty through his own negligence our law does not permit such person to set up a defence based on the absence of mens rea. Where there is an absolute prohibition in a statute, a man who can show that he has broken it through no fault of his own might well be heard, but not one who admits that through his own fault he has contravened it.—R. v. VIEDGE (1917), E. D. L. 160.—S. AF.

offence is created without a criminal intention on the part of the person who is charged, but those cases, where the ct. is dealing with a question of crime, are to my mind in themselves anomalous, & I should hesitate to increase their number without being satisfied upon argument that this is one of them (ATKIN, L.J.).—Re MAHMOUD & ISPAHANI, [1921] 2 K. 38. Necessity for proof of—Statutory requirement.—In cases where a statute requires a motive to be proved as an essential element of a crime, the prosecution must fail if such motive is not proved. The absence of mens rea really consists in an honest & reasonable belief entertained by the accused of the existence of facts, which, if true, would make the act charged against him innocent.—BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES v. PIPER, [1897] A. C. 383; 66 L. J. P. C. 73; 76 L. T. 572; 61 J. P. 660; 13 T. L. R. 413, P. C.

51. Sale of food contrary to regulations—Milk (Prices) Order, 1917.]—A carrier employed by applt. to supply his customers with milk served a customer with what purported to be two separate pints of milk, but which in fact were both short measure. The customer paid the carrier 8d., which was the maximum price for a quart of milk under the above Order. Owing, however, to the measure being short, the price paid for the actual milk served was at the rates of 10½d. per quart & 8½d. per quart. Applt. had warned the carrier against giving short measure. Informations were preferred against applt. for selling the milk at prices exceeding the maximum, & he was convicted:—Held: the conviction must be affirmed, since (1) applt. was liable for the act been allocated to him by an official of the Food Control Department. When slaughtered the cow was found to be in calf, & the butcher was charged with a contravention of the Live Stock (Sales) Order, 1919, s. 1. The sheriff convicted the accused, finding in fact that when the cow was graded the grader did not consider the cow to be in calf, nor did the allocator when the cow was allocated, that before the cow was slaughtered the allocator discovered the cow to be in calf, but did not inform the accused, & that when the cow was sent to be slaughtered the accused did not know that the allocator had discovered it to be in calf. Possession of unjust measure—Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 25.—Appls. were convicted of having in their possession for use for trade a false or unjust measure contrary to sect. 25 of the above Act. A servant of appls. had been sent out with a tank waggon containing oil, & had in his possession two five-gallon measures for the purpose of measuring oil sold & delivered to appls.' customers from the tank waggon. One of such measures was correct, but the other, which also belonged to appls., was found to contain a quantity of soap which rendered it false & unjust to the extent of three & a half pints. The measures supplied to appls.' servant were correct, but other measures set aside for repair were accessible to him. The oil in each waggon was checked morning & evening, & the servant did not bring back more oil than his deliveries during the day accounted for. Appls. were not cognisant of their servant's conduct, nor did they give their sanction & approval to the use by him of the unjust measure:—Held: the conviction must be quashed, since, although mens rea on the part of the employers was not an element in the offence, the physical possession of the unjust measure by appls.' servant was not in the circumstances the possession of appls.—ANGLO-AMERICAN OIL CO., LTD. v. 83. Distinguished from civil liability.]—Where a man makes a request to another to publish defamatory matter, of which for the purpose he gives him a statement, whether in full or in outline, & the agent publishes the matter, adhering to the sense & substance of it, although the language be to some extent his own, the man making the request is liable to an action as the publisher.

There is this distinction to be made between civil & criminal proceedings. In the former, a principal is only liable for acts done by his agent within the scope of his authority; but in the latter the principal who instructs an agent to do something illegal, which may be injurious to another, cannot qualify the wrong (BYLES, J.).—*PARKES v. The relieving officer purchased at applt.'s shop, from the son & partner of the applt., an iron bedstead, which was, by the direction of the relieving officer, delivered at the house of an outdoor pauper in the union. Applt. was not present when the bedstead was ordered, nor when it was paid for, nor when it was delivered, & the price was paid to his son alone. The bedstead was only lent to the pauper, & remained the property of the guardians:—Held: applt. was liable to the penalty imposed by Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 77, without proof of any guilty knowledge on his part, the bedstead having been supplied by his partner with knowledge of the circumstances, in the ordinary course of the partnership business.—*DAVIES v. ## PART I. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.

q. Whether master responsible.]—L. was supercargo of a ship conveying natives of T. & P. & other islands in the South Seas to be employed as labourers in F. A quarrel arose on board between the T. & P. natives, & a serious disturbance occurred, the P. natives shooting with bows & arrows at the T. natives & the crew. Muskets were given to the crew in the presence of L., who said to A., "Shoot if you can get a good shot at them," or "Fire down on them & take good aim." About twenty minutes afterwards & when the disturbance had to a great extent ceased, three of the crew who had previously received muskets, neither of them being A., shot the P.

natives dead. L. was tried for murder & found guilty of manslaughter:—Held: it was for the jury to decide on the nature of the orders given & to consider whether during the interval between their delivery & the discharge of the last shot, circumstances had so changed or so long a time elapsed, as orders had been virtually though not expressly withdrawn; their verdict ought not to be disturbed.—R. v. LEVINGER (1869), 6 W. W. & A'B. 147. —AUS.

98. — Accident whilst pilot on board vessel.]—The captain & pilot of a steamboat were both indicted for manslaughter of a person who was on board of a smack, by running the smack down. The running down was attributed, on the part of the prosecution, to improper steerage of the steamboat, arising from there not being a man at the bow to keep a look-out at the time of the accident. It was proved that there was a man on the look-out when the vessel started, about an hour previous. According to one witness, the captain & pilot were both on the bridge between the paddle-boxes:—Held: under these circumstances there was not such personal misconduct on the part of either as to make them guilty of felony.—R. v. ALLEN (1835), 7 C. & P. 153.

99. — Negligence of servant causing death.]—Deft. was a person who made fireworks contrary to 9 Will. 3, c. 7. He kept a quantity of combustibles at his house for the purpose of his business as a maker of fireworks. During his absence, through the negligence of his servants, a fire broke out amongst such combustibles, & a rocket becoming thereby ignited flew across the street, & setting fire to a house opposite, caused the death of a person therein:—Held: deft. was not guilty of manslaughter, as the death was not occasioned by the unlawful act of deft., but by the negligence of his servants.—R. v. BENNETT (1858), Bell, C. C. 1; 28 L. J. M. C. 27; 32

100. — Authority of editor of newspaper.]—On the trial of a criminal information for libel against the proprietors of a newspaper it appeared that defts. had appointed an editor with general authority to conduct the paper, & left it entirely to his discretion what should be inserted therein, & that such editor had inserted the libel in question without the knowledge or express authority of defts.:—Held: the general authority given to the editor was not per se evidence that defts. had authorised or consented to the publication of the libel, within the meaning of Libel Act, 1843 (c. 96), s. 7.

Criminal intention is not to be presumed, but is to be proved, & in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, a person who employs another to do a lawful act is to be taken to authorise him to do it in a lawful & not in an unlawful manner (LUSH, J.).—R. v. HOLBROOK (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 42; 48 L. J. Q. B. 113; 39 L. T. 536; 43 J. P. 38; 27 W. R. 313; 14 Cox, C. C. 185, D. C.

101. — Letter written by solicitor.]—In order to make a client criminally responsible for a letter written by his solr. it must be shown that the letter was written in pursuance of the instructions of the client.—R. v. DOWNER (1880), 43 L. T. 445; 45 J. P. 52; 14 Cox, C. C. 486, C. C. R.

102. — Quasi-criminal offence.]—By the general principles of criminal law, if a matter is made a criminal offence, it is essential that there should be something in the nature of mens rea, & therefore, in ordinary cases a master cannot be liable criminally for an offence committed by his servant. But there are exceptions to this rule in the case of quasi-criminal offences, as they may be termed, that is to say, where certain acts are forbidden by law under a penalty, possibly even under a personal penalty, such as imprisonment, at any rate in default of payment of a fine; & the reason for this is, that the Legislature has thought it so important to prevent the particular act from being committed that it absolutely forbids it to be done; & if it is done the offender is liable to a penalty whether he had any mens rea or not, & whether or not he intended to commit a breach of the law. Where the act is of this character then the master, who, in fact, has done the forbidden thing through his servant, is responsible & is liable to a penalty (CHANNELL, J.).—PEARKS, GUNSTON & TEE, LTD. v. WARD, HENNER v. SOUTHERN COUNTIES DAIRIES CO., [1902] 2 K. B.

PART I. SECT. 3. SUB-SECT. 3.—A.

Defts., relying upon a statement of the Minister of Customs reported in Commonwealth Hansard & the newspapers that the goods in question were free, instructed their clerk to pass an entry in the following terms: "39 bales of paper for wrapping fruit—Free." The clerk had no knowledge of the size of the paper, but was informed by a Custom's official that, being free it was 10 by 10, & by the latter's direction he inserted those figures. The paper was not, in fact, 10 by 10, & defts. were charged under Commonwealth Customs Act, 1901, s. 234 (d), with having made an entry which was false in that particular:—Held: defts. should have been convicted.

The fact that sect. 183 of the above Act makes special provision in one case as to the responsibility of a principal for the act of the agent does not in other cases in any way limit the responsibility of a principal for acts done in contravention of the Act, by his agent or servant in the ordinary course of his employment.—DAWSON v. JACK (1902), 28 V. L. R. 634.—AUS.

b. — Trespass by servant.]—The owner of sheep was prosecuted for wilfully causing them to trespass on a common contrary to Pounds Act, 1890, s. 30 (7). The servant of the owner, who was in charge of the sheep at the time, wilfully caused them to trespass, but the owner was not privy to or aware of the trespass:—Held: the owner was not liable to be convicted under the sect.—HOWELL v. BULLEN,

No liability attaches to a master, in respect of an indictable offence committed by his servant, when he has no personal part in the offences & when the punishment is fine & imprisonment & possibly death. In the absence & without the knowledge & against the instructions of his master, a tailor's salesman sold military badges, which, although not exposed for sale, were in his master's shop:—Held: master was not guilty of the offence under War Preamption Regulations, 1915, of selling badges.—MURPHY v. KENNEY, [1916] V. L. R. 335.—AUS.

103. — Stolen goods received by servant.—A master cannot be convicted of receiving stolen property well knowing it to have been stolen where the only evidence is that his servant received the goods, & there is no evidence that the servant received them with the authority or knowledge of the master.—R. v. PEARSON (No. 2) (1908), 72 J. P. 451; 1 Cr. App. Rep. 77, C. C. A.

104. — Nuisance adjoining highway—Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 70.—H. was the owner of a portable steam threshing machine & used to let it out to farmers who hired it. One day he sent his servant with it to a farm on hire, & the servant, by the farmer's direction, fixed it in the yard within the distance from the highway prohibited by sect. 70 of the above Act. H. was not aware of this, & was not present or in any way interfered.—Held: as H. was not present & took no part in the act, he could not be convicted under sect. 70 of the above Act, of committing a nuisance adjoining the highway.—HARRISON v. LEAPER (1862), 5 L. T. 640; 26 J. P. 373.

105. — Danger in highway.—A cart was injured through contact with a heap of stone which had been allowed to remain after nightfall upon a highway. The stone had been laid there by a carter who acted under the orders of a person to whom the surveyor had given general directions as to repairing the road, but the surveyor did not himself know that the stone had been laid on the road.—Held: the facts did not show any evidence of an offence by the surveyor within the meaning of Highways Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 56.—HARDCASTLE v. BIELBY, [1892] 1 Q. B. 709; 61 L. J. M. C. 101; 66 L. T. 343; 56 J. P. 549.

106. — Using naked lights in coal mine—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 50.—A limited company were owners of a coal mine, & C. was the managing director. A certificated manager had the control of the working, & C. did not interfere beyond finding the money to carry on the works, & publishing the rules. Some one having used naked lights contrary to the rule.—Held: C. was an "agent" but as he had taken all reasonable means by publishing the rules, he was not liable for the offence within sect. 50 of the above Act.—STOKES v. CHECKLAND (1893), 68 L. T. 457; 57 J. P. 232; 9 T. L. R. 235; 37 Sol. Jo. 251; 17 Cox, C. C. 631; 5 R. 240.

107. — Provision of safety lamps in mines—23 & 24 Vict., c. 151, s. 22.—As a general rule no penal consequences are incurred where there has been no personal neglect or default, & a mens rea is essential to an offence under a penal enactment, unless a contrary intention appears by express language or necessary inference.

Safety lamps were given out in a mine to which sect. 22 of the above Act applied, without being duly locked as required by sect. 10 of the Act; a competent lampman had been appointed, & there was no personal default in either the owners or the agent of the mine.—Held: the owners & the agent of the mine were not liable to be convicted under sect. 22 of the above Act.—*DICKENSON v. On the hearing of a summons against appts. under sect. 6 of the above Act, it was proposed, on behalf of appts., to call evidence to show that the action of the servant was contrary to their express instructions.—Held: sect. 6 of the above Act does not make a master responsible for the unauthorised acts of his servant.—*KEARLEY v. 112. — Overloading vessel—Merchant Shipping Act, 1876 (c. 80), s. 28.—A British ship was to the knowledge of the master so loaded in a foreign port as to submerge the centre of the of food for the purpose of sale or traffic therein, such bottles having stamped upon them the trade mark of an incorporated co. The bottles in question were filled by deft.'s servant without deft.'s knowledge. The jury returned a verdict of "guilty without knowledge".—Held: the clear object of the statute being to protect manufacturers and others in the use of their registered trade marks, knowledge on the part of deft. was not of the essence of the offence & that the trial judge was right in treating the verdict as one of guilty.—R. v. NEWCOMBE (1918), 52 N. S. R. 85; 40 D. L. R. 85; 29 Can. Cas. 249.—CAN.

e. — Landlord's responsibility in case of riot.—Accused was the sole proprietor of a village. A serious riot, involving loss of life, took place at village A., & the accused's naib, instead of doing anything to prevent or suppress the riot, accompanied the rioters & stood close by, while the riot was going on, after which he absconded. The accused, who had no knowledge that a riot was likely to be committed, was convicted under Penal Code, s. 154, & fined.—Held: a landlord is liable, under that sect. for the acts of commission as well as omission, not only of himself, but of his agent or manager. Knowledge, on the part of the owner or occupier of the land, of the acts or intentions of the agent, is not an essential element of an offence under that sect., & he may be convicted under that sect., although he may be in entire ignorance of the acts of his agent or manager.—*KAZI ZEAMUDDIN AHMED v. manager of the business, although without the authority or consent of the principal.—AGRICULTURE & TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION DEPARTMENT v. BURKE, [1915] 2 I. R. 128.—IR.

g. — Selling intoxicating liquor in less than lawful quantity.]—A holder of a spirit merchant's licence who sells less than two gallons of liquor can be convicted under Liquor Act, 1898, s. 45:—Held: the licensee was liable where the sale was made by a person left in charge of his shop, without evidence that the licensee had expressly authorised the sale.—Ex p. NORRIS (1906), 6 S. R. N. S. W. 47.—AUS.

h. — Sale of intoxicating liquor to unlicensed person.]—A clerk to a distiller, having sold a cask of whiskey to a party who had not a licence to sell spirits, at the request of the purchaser, sent it to him with a permit obtained in the name of another party:—Held: this amounted to the statutory offence & the employers were liable for the acts of their clerk, these having been done within the sphere of his employment.—ADVOCATE-GENERAL v. GRANT (1853), 15 Duml. (Ct. of Sess.) 980.—SCOT.

k. — Intoxicating liquor—Treating.]—In each of two public-houses the servant or person in charge supplied excisable liquor to one person which was paid for by another. One of the public-houses was occupied by the licensee-holder, the other was occupied by a firm of which the licensee-holder was a partner. In the former case the servant was the servant of the licensee-holder & in the latter case he was servant of the firm. In both cases the sales were effected without knowledge of the employers:—Held: in both cases, the licensee-holders were guilty of a contravention of the order, although sales were effected without their knowledge, & also in the case of the house occupied by the firm, although the servant was in the employment of the firm & not of the licensee-holder.—GAIR v. BREWSTER, SOUTAR v. HUTTON, [1916] S. C. (J). 36.—SCOT.

l. — Sunday trading.]—The servant of K., a storekeeper, while left by K. in charge of the store, sold articles to a customer on a Sunday. K. was ignorant of the sale & had, in fact, forbidden the servant to sell on as the user of the motor cycle was unauthorised by & unknown to applts., the failure to keep a record did not render them guilty of the offence charged under the above order.—*PHILLON & MOORE, LTD. v. 117. — Sale of intoxicating liquor to non-member of club—Refreshment House Act, 1860 (c. 27), s. 19.]—Applts., trustees & members of the managing committee of a club, were convicted under Licensing Acts, 1825 (c. 81), s. 26, & 1835 (c. 85), s. 17, & sect. 19 of the above Act, for selling liquor without a proper licence to persons not members of the club. It appeared that the liquor was sold in the club premises by the steward of the club, who in selling it acted contrary to the orders of applts. & without their knowledge or assent:—Held: the conviction was wrong, for ts. were not, under the circumstances, responsible for the act of the steward.—NEWMAN v. LEACH, 2 T. L. R. 600, D. C.

119. — — — — —.]—A barmaid, contrary to express orders, knowingly sold intoxicating liquor to a child under fourteen years of age in a bottle not corked & sealed. The licensee-holder, although not in the bar, was within call, & the justices found as a fact that he had not delegated to the barmaid the charge & control of the bar:—Held: the licensee-holder could not be convicted under sect. 2 of the above Act on a charge of "knowingly allowing" the barmaid so to sell the liquor.—MCKENNA v. HARDING (1905), 60 J. P. 354, D. C.

120. — — — — —.]—A licensee-holder left the management of a public-house to a manager. A barmaid, contrary to express orders, sold intoxicating liquor to a child under fourteen years of age in a bottle not corked & sealed, contrary to sect. 2 of the above Act. At the time the manager was in an adjoining bar, & might have seen, but did not see, what she was doing:—Held: although the manager was at the time in charge of the Sunday. The magistrate convicted K. of a contravention of Act 24, 1878, s. 1. On appeal by K., the conviction was upheld.—KAJEE v. R. (1919), 40 N. L. R. 321.—S. AF.

m. — Sale of indecent pictures.]—The accused who were general dealers, purchased, with other stock taken over at the same time, a large number of walking sticks, containing photographs, which were harmless save four or five. S., a servant in the employ of the accused, discovered indecent photographs in the four or five sticks, and without informing the accused, who were ignorant that there were indecent photographs in some of the sticks, sold one of the sticks containing an indecent photograph, & the accused were convicted of a contravention of Act 31 of 1892, s. 2:—Held: in the absence of evidence (a) that the accused might have contemplated the possibility of a contravention of the Act under which they were charged, owing to the character & scope of their servant's duties, or (b) that the accused's ignorance was due to their own default or neglect the conviction must be quashed.—*R. v. q. Selling intoxicating liquor during prohibited hours.—By order of Central Control Board (Liquor Traffic) for Scotland, West Central Area, dated 12 Aug. 1915, Act 2 (2), it is made an offence for any person either "by himself or by any servant or agent" to sell exciseable liquor during prohibited hours to any person in any licensed premises for consumption off the premises:—Held: the word "agent" was used in its ordinary legal signification & therefore that a licensee of premises was not responsible for every sale which took place within his premises, no matter by whom effected, but only for sales by himself, his servant, or a person who could be properly described as his agent.

A licensee charged with contravening the order has been rightly acquitted when the liquor had been sold without any authority by a boy whose licensee's shopman was authorised to employ only as an occasional messenger.—AULD v. DEVLIN, [1918] S. C. (J.) 41.—SCOT.

135. Sale of adulterated food—Sale of Food & Drugs Act, 1875 (c. 63), s. 6.—P., a servant of applt., was employed to sell milk out of cans by retail. The cans were received by applt., the master, on arrival from the country, & a sample taken from each can before it was sent out for sale. Applt. had published a warning to his statute which absolutely prohibits the act, an employer is criminally responsible for a commission of that act by his servants in the course of their employment. Act No. 27, 1882, s. 142, makes the accused criminally responsible for unnecessary delay in admitting the police to his premises even if that unnecessary delay is not the act of the accused but of his servants.—*R. v. 136. ———.]—Resp., a grocer, while his assistant was out of the shop, had made up for his own use a half pound packet consisting of a mixture of butter & margarine. This packet was inadvertently left upon the counter while resp. went to attend to a customer in another part of the shop, but it was not placed there for the purpose of sale. Resp.'s assistant then came in, & immediately afterwards a man came in & asked for half a pound of salt butter, & was served by the assistant with the same half pound of mixed butter & margarine. The assistant, seeing the half pound packet lying on the counter ready made, thought that it was there for the purpose of sale, but in selling it he was acting without the authority & contrary to the express instructions of resp. that he was to sell butter always from the bulk & not in ready made packages. 137. ———.]—Resps., retailers, purchased milk from a dairy farmer under a contract, by which the latter agreed to supply milk, with a warranty of quality. The milk was delivered to the proper railway station at 5.13 a.m. & was fetched away by resps. at 8 a.m. the same morning by their servant. He poured the contents of the can into two smaller cans, & then took them round for distribution among resps.' customers. He had no authority to sell milk to anybody except members of resps.' society who previously ordered a supply. While so delivering the milk the servant sold a small quantity to a non-member, the agent of applt., an inspector of weights & measures, which was deficient in quality & not of the nature, substance, & quality demanded. When charged under sect. 6 of the above Act, resps. gave due notice under Sale of Food & Drugs Act, 1899 (c. 51), s. 20 (1), & that they intended to rely on the above warranty by virtue of sect. 25 of the above Act. The magistrate found that resps. purchased the milk as the same in nature, substance, & quality as that demanded by applt. & that they sold it in the same state as when they received it from the railway co., & had no reason to believe at the time of the sale to the applt. that the milk was otherwise than of the nature, substance, & quality demanded. No evidence was offered by resps. before the magistrates dealing with the period which elapsed between the arrival of the milk at the station & its being fetched by the resps.:—Held: in selling to applt. resps.' servant had not acted without their authority, but had only misused the actual authority to sell which they had given him, & therefore resps. had sold the milk to applt. within the meaning of sect. 6 of the above Act.—*ELDER v. 138. — By person having no authority to sell.]—Resp.'s daughter, aged thirteen years, in accordance with her usual practice & general instructions from resp., a farmer, took each morning a pint of milk from resp.'s farmhouse in a can to deliver at the house of a customer in fulfilment of an order previously given by the customer. Resp. entrusted his daughter with the pint of milk for the purpose only of delivering it to the customer. On one particular morning an inspector under the Food & Drugs Acts met the daughter as she was carrying the pint of milk to the customer's house but before she had arrived there, & demanded to purchase from her a pint of milk which she delivered to him out of the can containing the pint of milk intended for the customer. The milk so sold to the inspector contained added water to the extent of 24 per cent. The daughter delivered the milk to the inspector because he demanded it & because "some people are fined for not doing as the policemen tell them." On an information against resp. for selling milk to the prejudice of the purchaser, justices held that the daughter had no authority to sell the pint of milk to the inspector, but in fact delivered it to him because she was afraid to refuse it after his demand, & that consequently there was no sale by resp. to the prejudice of the inspector. On a case being stated by the justices:—Held: the justices were entitled to find that the daughter had no authority to make any contract of sale, inasmuch as her instructions were limited to carrying the milk.—*WHITTAKER v. 140. Sale of food contrary to regulations—Food (Conditions of Sale) Order, 1917.]—Resps., a limited co., owned a shop for the sale of food. & they caused to be posted in the shop a notice that in relation to the sale of sugar there were at the shop no conditions involving the purchase of other goods. Resps.' manager also gave express instructions to all their assistants that they must impose no conditions on the sale of food. On an information against resps. for imposing, in connection with the sale of sugar, a condition relating to the purchase of another article, contrary to the above Order, the justices found that an assistant, who, with the authority of resps.' manager, was serving at the counter, had, in connection with the sale of sugar, imposed a condition relating to the purchase of another article, but they held that, as resps. had expressly forbidden the assistant to impose any condition, they were not criminally responsible:—Held: the terms of the order showed that it was intended to make a master criminally responsible for the act of his servant, acting within the scope of his employment, even when such act was done in disobedience to express instructions, & therefore the justices ought to have convicted.—*WARRINGTON v. 143. Selling intoxicating liquor without licence—Licensing Act, 1872 (c. 94), s. 3.—A. was charged under sect. 3 of the above Act with selling intoxicating liquor without a licence. A. kept a tobacco shop & refreshment house, but had no licence to sell liquors by retail. A.'s wife sold bottles of ale to customers, but there was no evidence that A. knew anything of her so acting:—Held: a conviction by the justices making A. liable for the acts of his wife was wrong.—*ALLEN v. 144. —J.—Resp., who was the proprietress of a hydro, & held no licence for the sale of intoxicating liquor, bought beer at wholesale prices, & beer was sold at the retail price by her servant at the hydro to one of the guests, & her book-keeper received the money. On an information against resp. for selling beer by retail without a licence, the justices declined to convict on the ground that resp. being an unlicensed person, was not responsible for acts committed by her servant without her knowledge:—Held: there was evidence that resp. had retailed beer without a licence & the justices ought to have convicted.—*JONES v. 148. Suffering gaming on licensed premises—Licensing Act, 1872 (c. 94), s. 17 (1).—Applt. was charged under sect. 17 of the above Act with suffering gaming to be carried on on her premises, an hotel at E. It was proved by witnesses that, while standing in the public street at E. between half-past one & a quarter to two in the morning, they could hear the conversation of three persons in a room in the hotel. These three persons were a horse trainer, a jockey, & a gentleman of N., & from what was heard of their conversation, it was evident that they were playing for money. No direct evidence was given that applt. knew of the gaming. Applt. stated that the house was closed at 11 p.m., that the three men were then in their private room, that she saw no cards, & did not supply any, & did not know of any card playing. The hall porter, whose duty it was to attend upon customers, stated that he closed the house after 11 p.m., & retired to his own chair in a parlour beyond the bar, at the extreme end of the house. He knew nothing whatever of any gambling. The justices drew the inference from the porter's evidence that his chair was removed to the greatest possible distance from the room where the guests were, in order that he might not hear what passed, & they thought that applt. knew that gaming was intended to be carried on, & that she purposely took pains not to know what her guests were doing:—Held: applt. was responsible for the conduct of the hall porter whom she left in charge of the hotel, & there was evidence that the porter suspected what was going on, & connived at it.—*REDGATE v. C., on being summoned, proved that manager went to bed, leaving "Boots" to attend to house, & the justices found as a fact that "Boots" knew of the gaming, but wilfully shut his eyes & ears:—Held: the justices were right in convicting C., who was liable for the neglect of the "Boots."—*CRABTREE v. ## SUB-SECT. 2.—IGNORANCE OR MISTAKE OF FACT.

160. Ignorance—General rule.—When guilty knowledge is in issue there ought not, especially in the case of a deft. of good character, to be a conviction if the facts are as consistent with ignorance as knowledge.—R. v. JELLYMAN (1921), 16 Cr. App. Rep. 43, C. C. A.

He was found guilty of wilful neglect under sect. 1 (3) of the above Act, & sentenced to imprisonment. The verdict of the jury was "guilty of wilful neglect through ignorance":—Held: the words the jury added did not negative the wilfulness, & the words "through ignorance" did not necessarily contradict a finding that the neglect was

e. Mistake of law giving rise to bona fide claim of right.—Prisoner was convicted of stealing a dead sow, the property of R. The sow had strayed into prisoner's land & he had killed it, & afterwards made it into pork, taking steps to conceal from R. that the pig was his. The Chairman of Quarter Sessions ruled that under Impounding Act of 1865 (29 Vict. No. 2), s. 27, a person was not justified in appropriating the carcase of an animal killed by him under the authority of the section, without making reasonable efforts to ascertain the owner. At the same time he told the jury that prisoner must be acquitted, if mistaking the effect of that sect., he thought he had a right to the carcase:—Held: the direction was right.—*R. v. ## PART I. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 2.

160 i. Ignorance—General rule.—Where an act committed in certain circumstances has been made an offence by statute, the question whether knowledge or belief of the existence of those circumstances is essential to the offence, depends upon the intention of the Legislature.

A prisoner was charged with having indecently assaulted a girl under 12. The jury found specially that the prisoner, while stupefied with drink, had entered in the dark, & for an immoral purpose, the house where the girl was, believing it to be a house of ill-fame:—Held: even assuming that the prisoner had reasonable grounds for his belief, his ignorance that the person wilful.—R. v. PETCH (1909), 25 T. L. R. 401; 2 Cr. App. Rep. 71, C. C. A.

162. Assault on constable—In execution of his duty.—To support a charge of assault on a constable in the execution of his duty, it is not necessary that deft. should know that he was a constable then in the execution of his duty; it is sufficient that the constable should have been actually in the execution of his duty & had then been assaulted.—R. v. FORBES & WEBB (1865), 10 Cox, C. C. 362.

164. Mistake—Killing wrong person.—If a man intending to kill a thief or a house breaker in his own house, happens by mistake to kill one of his own family, it cannot be imputed to him as a criminal action.—LEVETT'S CASE (1639), cited in Cro. Car. 538; 1 Hale, P. C. 474; 79 E. R. 1064. Annotations:—Refd. Cook's Case (1640), Cro. Car. 537; R. v. Tolson (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 168.

165. Poison put into wrong bottle.—R. v. NOAKES, No. 177, post.

166. Shooting at wrong person.—A man who was living apart from his wife obtained entrance, in the night time, into her house by opening an area window. The wife heard that some one was in the house, came downstairs with a pistol, & fired a shot which wounded her husband. She said she did not know it was her husband till

m. Slaughter of cow in calf.—In a prosecution of a farmer for selling a heifer in calf for slaughter contrary to Live Stock (Sales) Order, 1918:—Held: the fact that the seller did not know the heifer was in calf was no defence to the charge.—ANDERSON v. ROSE, [1919] S. C. (J.) 20.—SCOT.

n. What amounts to ignorance.—A butcher slaughtered a cow which after grading had been allocated to him by an official of the Food Control Department. When slaughtered the cow was found to be in calf, & the butcher was charged with a contravention of the Live Stock (Sales) Order, 1919, s. 1. The sheriff convicted the accused, finding in fact that when the cow was graded the grader did not consider the cow to be in calf, nor did the allocator when the cow was allocated, that before the cow was slaughtered the allocator discovered the cow to be in calf but did not inform the accused, & that when the cow was sent to be slaughtered the accused did not know that the allocator had discovered it to be in calf. The accused appealed:—Held: even if justifiable ignorance was a good defence to the charge, the sheriff's findings in fact did not disclose justifiable ignorance.—BEATTIE v. WAUGH (1920), 57 Sc. L. R. 471.—SCOT.

o. Mistake—General rule.—The maxim Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea, applies to excuse a deft. from an act which would otherwise be unlawful only where the belief on which deft. acts, is a belief as to the facts &

he assaulted was under the age of 12 years, was in law no answer to the charge.—R. v. GIBSON (1885), 11 V. L. R. 94.—AUS.

g. Possession of still.—A person is not guilty of having in his possession a still under Inland Revenue Act, s. 108 (e) if, though the still be on his premises, he has no knowledge of its existence.—R. v. CALPAN (1920), 2 W. W. R. 135; 51 D. L. R. 672; 32 Can. Crim. Cas. 267; 30 Man. L. R. 316.—CAN.

h. Possession of apparatus for smoking opium.—Where a person is accused of being in unlawful possession of opium without a permit, the fact that he had no knowledge that the apparatus for smoking the same was in his possession, is no answer to the charge, unless it can be shown that it was placed there by other persons.—R. v. SUNG LUNG (1923), 39 Can. Crim. Cas. 187.—CAN.

k. Indecent matter in newspaper.—The sale of a newspaper containing matter of an indecent, immoral, or obscene nature is an act which in itself prima facie imports a guilty mind, but in such a case honest ignorance of the contents of the newspaper in question is a defence.—R. v. EWART (1905), 25 N. Z. L. R. 709.—N.Z.

l. Ship in unseaworthy condition.—Although it is necessary for the prosecution to show scienter in order to establish a breach of Shipping & Seamen Act, 1908, s. 224 (2), which prohibits a master from knowingly taking a British ship to sea in such an unseaworthy state that the life of any person is likely to be thereby endangered, scienter or knowledge is not a necessary ingredient of the offence created by sect. 224 (1) of that Act, which prohibits any person from sending a British ship to sea in such an unseaworthy state, etc. Therefore a verdict of a jury of "guilty through

The jury were directed that if prisoner had reasonable grounds for believing that the person was in her house for a felonious purpose, & only fired for the purpose of frightening such person, not knowing it was her husband, she ought to be acquitted.—R. v. DENNIS (1905), 69 J. P. 256.

167. — Abduction of girl under sixteen.]—Prisoner was convicted under Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 55, of unlawfully taking an unmarried girl under the age of sixteen out of the possession & against the will of her father. It was proved that prisoner did take the girl, & that she was under sixteen; but that he bond fide believed, & had reasonable ground for believing, that she was over sixteen:—Held: the latter fact afforded no defence, & prisoner was rightly convicted.—R. v. PRINCE (1875), L. R. 2 C. C. R. 154; 44 L. J. M. C. 122; 32 L. T. 700; 39 J. P. 676; 24 W. R. 76; 13 Cox, C. C. 138, C. C. R.

p. — Sale of intoxicating liquor on Sunday.]—When a licensee is charged under Licensed Victualler's Further Amendment Act, 1896, s. 36, with unlawfully supplying liquor on a Sunday to a person not a bond fide traveller, it is a good defence that such licensee was deceived by false representation of such person that he was a bond fide traveller. It is not necessary that such persons should also have been convicted of obtaining liquor by means of such false representation.—BARRETT v. SULLIVAN (1900), S. A. L. R. 48.—AUS.

q. — Bigamy.]—Criminal Code, s. 16, does not save all common law defences to a charge of bigamy, but only those which are not altered by or inconsistent with the provisions of the Code. The provisions of sect. 307, declaring an honest belief in death & an existing valid divorce good defences, are inconsistent with a defence or merely a belief, no matter how honest or reasonable, in a divorce; & if such ever constituted a defence, it is not continued by sect. 16; & semble, it never constituted a valid defence, being an exception for the Crown to show mens rea.—R. v. BLEILER (1912), 21 W. L. R. 18; 1 D. L. R. 878; 2 W. W. R. 5.—CAN.

PART I. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 3.

168 i. May negative intent.]—Prisoner being indicted for stealing & receiving certain horses was acquitted of the stealing but found guilty of receiving. After the verdict of guilty had been pronounced & minuted by the clerk the jury said they recommended the prisoner to mercy on the ground that they thought that she believed herself to have some claim to the property:—Held: in the circumstances the verdict was wrong & prisoner ought not to have been convicted.—R. v. DICKSON (1865), 4 N. S. W. S. C. R. 298.—AUS.

168 ii. —.]—A servant absenting himself from his employment in the bond fide belief that he has a right to do so is not liable to a conviction for unlawfully absenting himself though he may be mistaken.—R. v. MOLLISON, Ex p. CRICHTON (1876), 2 V. L. R. 144.—AUS.

168 iii. —.]—A. was convicted summarily of "wantonly breaking up a carriage-way" in violation of a bye-law of a municipality. A's father had conditionally purchased the land across which the alleged road ran, & that A. always cultivated the portion reserved for a road in common with the rest of his land, ploughing across it & taking crops off it every year for six years. The breaking up complained of was the ploughing across the road by A. who was tilling a crop of corn growing there. There was no evidence of any proclamation of the road or any dedication to the public other than a reservation by a surveyor & a marking by order of the surveyor-general:—Held: conviction was wrong, inasmuch as the act complained of was not done wantonly but in assertion of a right.—Ex p. WATT (1878), 1 N. S. W. S. C. R. N. S. 24.—AUS.

168 iv. —.]—Deft. who had been for many years an opium smoker was suffering from dyspnoea & consulted a medical man who prescribed "Ext opii 2 ozs. liquid for smoking purposes." By virtue of this prescription the deft. obtained two ozs. of opium from a chemist. He was prosecuted under the Aborigines Protection & Restriction of the Sale of Opium Act, 1897, for unlawfully having opium in his possession:—Held: he had not committed an offence against the Act.—MORONEY v. QUOK YEN, [1908] S. Q. R. 205.—AUS.

168 v. —.]—Prisoner & his wife were absolutely divorced in Illinois, where they were domiciled, by a decree which gave the custody of their child, five years old, to the wife, with permission to prisoner to take it out with him in the day time, but to return it the same day. The prisoner, having thus obtained the child, brought it to Canada:—Held: prisoner's contention that he has acted in good faith because he had been advised that the decree of divorce having been obtained collusively, was a nullity.—R. v. WARRE (1902), 3 O. L. R. 368; 5 Can. Crim. Cas. 246.—CAN.

168 vi. —.]—A., the servant of B., was convicted of criminal trespass in going upon the land of C., one of B.'s tenants & preventing him from cutting his crops. B. was convicted of abetment of criminal trespass. A. & B. pleaded that they were acting in the exercise of the legal right of distraint. It appeared that no written demand under Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869), s. 72, for the amount of the arrears, together with an account exhibiting the grounds on which demand had been made, was served on C., & that no written authority under sect. 76 had been given by B. to A.:—Held: it lay upon A. & B. to show that they had conformed to the provisions of the law, or at least had acted with the bond fide intention of distraining the complainant's crops;

SUB-SECT. 3.—BONÂ FIDE CLAIM OF RIGHT.

168. May negative intent.]—Where intent is a necessary ingredient to any particular crime, bond fide belief in a claim of right may be a good defence as showing there was no criminal intent.—R. v. HALL (1828), 3 C. & P. 409.

169. —.]—The ct. will not grant a criminal information against a party who appears to have acted bond fide on a conviction that he was exercising a legal right.—R. v. BLURTON (1838), 2 Jur. 33.

168 vii. —.]—Appl't. was charged with having wilfully obstructed the driving of horses along a public road or thoroughfare. The public use of the road had been discontinued, but the informant still used it as a means of access to his slaughter yard. Appl't. held an occupation license for certain land, of which the road in question formed part, & he had fenced it in:—Held: appl't. having acted under reasonable supposition of right, the conviction was wrong.—LUDEMANN v. BARNETT, 2 J. R. N. S. 108.—N.Z.

168 viii. —.]—Accused was charged, under Criminal Code Act, 1893, s. 318, with the crime of mischief in wounding a horse by shooting it. Accused gave evidence admitting wilfully shooting the horse, but attempting to justify it. He stated that it had for six months before been repeatedly trespassing on land in his possession & breaking his fences; that he had great difficulty in turning it out; that he could not catch it; & that he had failed to find out who the owner was. The judge directed the jury that there was no evidence that the accused acted with colour of right within the meaning of Criminal Code Act, 1893, s. 307 (2):—Held: the direction was right. To amount to "colour of right" there must be an honest belief in the existence of a state of facts which, if it actually existed, would at law justify or excuse the act done.—R. v. FETZER (1900), 19 N. Z. L. R. 438.—N.Z.

168 ix. —.]—A person, who had been convicted on a summary complaint of having wilfully, maliciously, & mischievously destroyed a wall on a fen or lot of ground specified, appealed against the conviction. The following facts were stated in the case:—The wall in question had been erected many years before the proceedings in question. It was not stated in the complaint, & was not proved, to whom the wall belonged, but appl't., who had been previously warned against interfering with it, claimed a right of property in it, or in the ground on which it stood, although he asserted a right of way over the ground, which the wall obstructed. No violence or disorderly conduct was proved beyond the operations necessary to break down the wall, which was of little value:—Held: the facts found proved sufficiently instructed the crime of malicious mischief.—FORBES v. ROSS (1898), 25 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 60; 35 Sc. L. R. 743; 6 S. L. T. 12.—SCOT.

Sect. 4.—Grounds of defence and exemptions from criminal liability: Sub-sects. 3, 4 & 5.]

170. — Even though erroneous.]—The belief, although erroneous, of prisoner in the existence of a right to do the act complained of excludes criminality.—R. v. TWOSE (1879), 14 Cox, C. C. 327.

Annotation:—Refd. R. v. Rutter* (1908), 1 Cr. App. Rep. 174.

171. — Recovery of goods.]—Prisoners were indicted for burglariously entering the house of S. with intent to steal the goods of H., an excise officer. It appeared that prisoners had entered the house to recover some tea, which had been seized by H., on behalf of the supposed owner:—

170 i. — Even though erroneous.]—The removal of property in the assertion of a bond fide claim of right unfounded in law & fact does not constitute theft. A colourable pretence to obtain or keep possession of property does not avail as a defence. Whether the claim is bond fide or not must be determined upon all the circumstances of the case & a ct. ought not to convict unless it holds that the claim is a mere pretence.—ARFAN ALI v. IL (1916), 1 L. R. 44 Cal. 66.—IND.

Question for jury.]—Where a prisoner charged with larceny sets up that he took the article under a claim of right, the question for the jury is, whether he honestly believed the article to be his & not whether he had reasonable grounds for so believing.—R. v. NUNDAH (1916), 16 S. R. N. S. W. 482; 33 N. S. W. N. 196.—AUS.

s. — — —.]—The accused shot a bull which was trespassing & had repeatedly trespassed upon his land & inflicted damage upon his stock, he being under the belief that he was justified in doing so:—Held: the question whether the circumstances of this belief constituted a colour of right justifying the act was a question for the jury.—R. v. MCKENZIE (1895), 13 N. Z. L. R. 309.—N.Z.

Right previously adjudicated upon by the courts.]—Prisoner was indicted with having unlawfully taken away a female child then about eight years & a half, with intent to deprive the parent of & then having the lawful charge of the child, of the possession of such child. He pleaded "Not guilty." The child was taken away with intent to deprive the mother of the possession of the child. The Supreme Ct. had refused an application by prisoner for a writ of habeas corpus directed to the mother to produce the child. The trial judge held that, in view of the order made by the Supreme Ct. on the application for a writ of habeas corpus, the prisoner was not entitled to the custody of the child, & that the taking was therefore unlawful. He directed the jury accordingly, & told them that they ought to convict the prisoner, unless they thought that when he got possession of the child he was claiming in good faith a right to the possession of the child. The jury found the prisoner guilty:—Held: the direction to the jury was right in law, & that conviction should be affirmed.—R. v. MIKKELSEN (1912), 31 N. Z. L. R. 1261.—N.Z.

a. — Right claimed impossible in law.]—The usual reservation in a patent of land bounded by navigable water of "free access to the shore for all vessels, boats, & persons," gives a right of access only from the water to the shore. Where a person who had broken down fences & had driven across private property to the shore:—Held: he could not successfully assert, when charged under R. S. O. 1897, c. 120, s. 1, & the criminal code, s. 511, that he had "acted under a fair & reasonable supposition of right" in so doing.—R. v. DAVY (1900), 27 A. R. 508.—CAN.

b. — — —.]—Where deft. to a summons seeks to justify the act complained of as done in exercise of a right which could not exist in law, he cannot have "fair & reasonable grounds for a bond fide claim of right," & the justices should convict. Prosecutor was convicted of trespass on the lands of C. He admitted the entry on the lands, but claimed it was made in exercise of a right of way. The public right of way from a public road across C's lands to a private bathing-place on the land of R. C's neighbour. The justices stated in their order that the right claimed was not "substantially supported by evidence":—Held: the right claimed being one impossible in law, the conviction was good.—R. v. TYRONE TRUSTEES, [1917] 2 I. R. 96.—IR.

c. — Claim founded on religious belief.]—Medical attendance & remedies are necessities within Criminal Code, ss. 209 & 210, & any one legally liable to provide such is criminally responsible for neglect to do so. Conscientious belief that it is against the teachings of the Bible & therefore wrong to have recourse to medical attendance & remedies is no excuse.—R. v. BROOKS (1902), 9 B. C. R. 13.—CAN.

d. — Belief in witchcraft.]—Appet. being charged with murder, admitted the killing, but claimed that he was not legally responsible for his act on the ground that he believed deceased had killed two of his children by witchcraft:—Held: he was not thereby relieved from responsibility, & he was rightly convicted.—R. v. RADEBE (1915), App. D.—S. AF.

e. — Mixed legal & moral right.]—Deft. was charged with having, wilfully, maliciously & without colour of right, entered on certain creek placer mining claims, & cut a hole in a dam, thereby causing water to be conveyed to one of the claims, to the injury thereof. Accused entered upon the property & tore out part of the dam, throwing out a box which was meant for a sluice-gate & some stakes supporting the dam. Deft. set up a bond fide colour of right:—Held: colour of right means an honest belief in a state of facts which, if it existed, would be a legal justification or excuse; & upon the evidence, deft. was not proceeding upon an honest belief that he had a legal right to do what he did, but rather upon a hazy belief in a mixed legal & moral right, which would not excuse.—R. v. WATIER (1910), 15 W. L. R. 427.—CAN.

f. — Matter rather civil than criminal.]—J. & W. were charged at common law with having been guilty of the crime of malicious mischief in that they did wickedly, feloniously, & maliciously break down & destroy four feet of a paling of a green occupied by G. The magistrate convicted the accused. G. had been tenant under

Held: the indictment could not be supported, there being no intention to steal. Qu.: if the indictment had laid the intent to be to rescue the goods found, which is felony by statute.—R. v. KNIGHT & ROFFEY (1781), 2 East, P. C. 510, C. C. R.

172. — Recovery of money.]—A., at C. fair, came up to B., the prosecutor's father, being a stranger to him, & gave him eleven sovereigns to buy him a horse, & B. put them into his pocket. B. refused to give the eleven sovereigns back, & A. & prisoner, who was in his company, assaulted him, but could not get the money from him. On the next day prisoner asked B. for the eleven sovereigns, & at L. fair, on a subsequent day, the comrs. of police for the burgh for some months of a portion of the green (no part of which had previously been let) adjoining the property of J. On entering on the lease G., at the request of the comrs. of police, put up, at his own expense, a wooden paling round his ground. When doing so he left open a space of six feet for an access to the property of J., which entered by way of the green. Jul. 21, 1879, by order of the Chief Magistrate of the burgh, he closed up the space of six feet with a paling. July 24, J. & W., without giving any notice to G., broke down the fence at the place where their access had previously been. For the defence it was proved that J. had for many years possessed a property adjoining the green, & adjacent to that part of it leased by G.; that his only access to his property, July 21, 1879, was by way of the green; & through the gap in the fence left by G., & that this access was closed by the fence erected on that day:—Held: though the conduct of applt. was perhaps not to be commended, yet in the circumstances he was justified in removing the barrier erected across his access, & any question as to his right fell to be settled by a civil action rather than criminally in the police ct.—BLACKS v. LAING (1879), 7 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1.—SCOT.

g. — False statement known by prisoner to be false.]—L., a duly qualified medical practitioner, charged under REGISTRATION OF DOCTORS, Deaths & Marriages Act, 1915, s. 22, with having wilfully made for the purpose of their being inserted in a Register of deaths false statements concerning the particulars required to be registered in reference to the death of H. L. had acquired a medical practice & had put in charge of it B., a medical student in the fifth years of his course, who undertook to call in L. on all needful occasions. L. stated that owing to the conditions created by the existing war such an arrangement was recognised by the Medical Society as proper. B. attended a patient, H., who died after a few days' illness. L. himself never attended or saw H., but he gave a certificate of death in which he stated, "I attended H. I last saw her on 16.7.16." Defence was that L. honestly thought that he was entitled to give the certificate because B. was his agent & had in that capacity & on his behalf attended H. Jury were in effect directed to convict L., & they brought in verdict of guilty:—Held: as the statements were false & were known by L. to be false & were intentionally made by him the conviction was right. The fact that L. honestly believed that he was entitled to give such certificate afforded no defence.—R. v. LOWE, [1917] V. L. R. 155.—AUS.

h. — Right based on fraudulent Order-in-Council.]—Order-in-Council passed with a fraudulent or unlawful design cannot be invoked to exempt the ministers who secured or connived at its passage from the criminal prisoner having seen prosecutor receive seven sovereigns, demanded the eleven sovereigns of him, & knocked him down, & tried to get the seven sovereigns out of his pocket:—Held: there was such a semblance of a claim of right, that this was not an assault with intent to rob.—R. v. BODEN (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 395.

WAISTELL* (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 358.

176. Effect of carelessness—Obstruction caused by accident.]—A. having a right to cross a railway with a waggon laden with timber, did so shortly before a train came up, & owing to an accident, the waggon broke down on the line, but the engine cut through the logs of wood without injury:—Held: although the party was guilty of carelessness yet, as he did not intend to create an obstruction, he was not liable to the penalty imposed by a railway Act for wilful obstruction.—BATTING v. BRISTOL & EXETER Ry. Co. (1860), 3 L. T. 665; 25 J. P. 534; 9 W. R. 271.

177. Effect of negligence—Mistake by chemist.]—A mistake on the part of a chemist in putting a poisonous liniment into a medicine bottle, instead of a liniment bottle, in consequence of which the liniment was taken by his customer internally with fatal result, the mistake being made under circumstances which rather threw prisoner off his guard:—Held: this did not amount to such criminal negligence as would warrant a conviction for manslaughter.—R. v. NOAKES (1866), 4 F. & F. 920.

179. Whether an excuse—Removal of corpse from burial ground.]—It is a misdemeanour at common law to remove without lawful authority a corpse from a grave in a burying ground belonging to a congregation of protestant dissenters, although the motive of the person so acting may be pious & laudable.—*R. v. l. — Right of private defence.]—If the accused are justified in resisting the theft of the crops, they cannot be considered as member of an unlawful assembly, with the common object to assert a right to the disputed land & crops, because some members thereof may have exceeded the right of private defence; but if some of the members continue in it, after the others have exceeded the right by the infliction of unnecessary violence, & aid & abet the latter, they also must be considered as having exceeded the right. Where the accused, three of whom were armed with a sword, a scythe, & an iron-shod stick respectively, & the rest with lathis, went in a large body to a certain disputed land, where the labourers of the opposite party were reaping some musouri crop & attacking them, fatally wounding one & severely injuring another:—Held: the accused who ordered the attack & those who

m. — Malicious injury to property.]—A man who has been for years in possession of land, & bona fide believing it to be his own, cuts down a fence erected on it by the owner, cannot be convicted of malicious injury to property.—PRICE v. NGATUERE TAWHAO (1884), 3 N. Z. L. R. 145.—N.Z.

n. — Where statute says "wilfully" injure.]—Semble: the word "wilfully" in Police Offences Act, 1884, s. 6 (3), means only "intentionally," & does not imply mens rea, though a bona fide belief that there is a right to do the act is an answer to the charge.—*RYAN v. o. — —.]—Accused was charged with, & convicted of, contravening Act 17 of 1912 (S.A.), s. 21, "in that he wilfully injured a certain fence." He pleaded a bona fide assertion of a right of way:—Held: inasmuch as "wilfully" in the sect. in question means "intentionally" & not "with evil intent," the accused could not escape criminal liability by

p. Effect of somnambulism.]—To an indictment charging a panel with the murder of his child, he pleaded "not guilty," & further, "that at the time the crime was committed he was asleep." After evidence, the jury, under the judge's direction, returned a verdict finding that the panel killed his child, but that at the time he was in a state in which he was unconscious of the act by reason of the condition of somnambulism, & was accordingly not responsible. The panel was thereupon discharged after his giving an undertaking that in future no one but himself would sleep in the room which he might occupy.—*H.M. ADVOCATE v. 182. ———.]—Neglect to procure medical aid.]—Since the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (c. 122), s. 37, it is manslaughter if a child die from neglect of a parent to provide medical aid for the child, & it is no answer to the charge of manslaughter that the parent so neglected from a conscientious religious belief that it was wrong to call in medical aid, & that medical aid was not required, & not from any intention to disobey the law.—R. v. It makes no difference that such person believes that to call in medical aid would be wrong, as being contrary to the teaching of the Bible, or as showing want of faith.—R. v. SENIOR, [1899] 1 Q. #### PART I. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 6.

187 i. When a defence—Military orders.]—Deft., a corporal, was tried for the murder of White, a private of the same regiment, & convicted of manslaughter. White having been placed in confinement while in a state of intoxication, deft., with two men, were ordered by S., a sergeant of the regiment, to have the deceased tied so that he could not make a noise by kicking & shouting. The order was not executed in such manner as to entirely put an end to the noise, & a second order was given to tie up the deceased so that he could not shout. In carrying the latter order deft. caused deceased to be placed on the floor face downwards, with his hands cuffed behind his back; a rope was fastened to his feet, which were drawn up behind his back, & the rope passed over his shoulders & across his mouth & back again to his feet.—Held: (1) whether the illegality consisted in the order of the sergeant or in the manner in which it was carried out, deft. might properly be convicted; (2) the jury were justified in finding that the death of White was caused or accelerated by the way in which he was tied by deft. or by his directions.—R. v. 187 ii. ———.]—Accused was a sepoy in a native infantry regiment. On the occasion of a fire in the city of A., he & the rest of his co. turned out to assist in extinguishing it. He with other sepoys was stationed by their officer with orders to keep clear a space in front of the burning house, & not to allow any one not in uniform to intrude on that space. 223. Absence of understanding.]—If he was under visitation of God & could not distinguish between good & evil & did not know what he did he could not be guilty of any offence against the law; for guilt arises from the mind & the wicked will & intention of a man. If a man be deprived of his reason & consequently of his intention, he cannot be guilty. It is not every frantic & idle humour of a man that will exempt him from justice & the punishment of the law. When a man is guilty of a great offence it must be very plain & clear, before a man is allowed such an exemption. Therefore it is not every kind of frantic humour, or something unaccountable in a man's actions that points him out to be such a madman as is exempted from punishment. It must be a man that is totally deprived of his understanding & memory & doth not know what he is doing, no more than an infant, a brute, or a wild beast (TRACY, J.).—ARNOLD'S CASE (1724), 16 State Tr. 695.

(1) A person labouring under partial delusions only, & not otherwise insane, who did the act charged with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or wrong, or of producing some public benefit, is punishable, if he knew at the time that he was acting contrary to the law of the land. If a party labouring under an insane delusion as to existing facts, & not otherwise insane, commits an offence, he must be considered in the same situation as if the facts in respect to which the delusion exists were real.

(2) To establish a defence on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that, at the time of committing the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature & quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it, that he did not know that what he was doing was wrong.

If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do & if that act was at the same time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable.

(3) Where the defence of insanity is set up, a medical witness who never saw prisoner before but was present during the whole of the trial, cannot in strictness be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or whether prisoner was conscious at the time of doing the act that he was acting contrary to law, or whether he was labouring under any & what delusion at the time. Such questions involve the determination of the truth of the facts deposed to, which it is for the jury to decide. But where the facts are admitted or not disputed, & the question becomes one of science only, such questions may be allowed to be put in that general form, though this cannot be insisted on as a matter of right.

words "nature & quality" in the second & third answers of the judges to the House of Lords in M'Naghten's Case, No. 229, ante, refer only to the physical character of the act & were not intended to distinguish between the physical & moral aspects of the act.

The standard to be applied is whether according to the ordinary standard adopted by reasonable men the act was right or wrong. Once it is clear that applt. knew that the act was wrong in law, then he was doing an act which he was conscious he ought not to do, & as it was against the law, it was punishable by law (LORD READING, C.J.).—R. v. CODERE (1916), 12 Cr. App. Rep. 21, C. C. A.

232. Lack of knowledge that act was wrong.]—To entitle prisoner to be acquitted on the ground of insanity, he must, at the time of the committing of the offence, have been so insane that he did not know right from wrong.

If you think that, at the time of the committing of the offence, he did know right from wrong, he is responsible for his acts, although he is of weak intellect (MAULE, J.).—R. v. HIGGINSON (1843), 1 Car. & Kir. 129.

233. ———.]—On an indictment for maliciously setting fire to a building, it is not necessary to prove actual ill will in prisoner towards the owner, & in order to justify a jury in acquitting prisoner on the ground of insanity, they must believe that he did not know right from wrong.

If a man being in his right mind burns property belonging to another, a jury ought to infer malice from the act itself (CROMPTON, J.).—R. v. DAVIES (1858), 1 F. & F. 69.

234. ———.]—Insanity must conduce to the act charged.]—The insanity which makes a man punishable is an insanity which conduces to & occasions the act itself, which is inquired into. An insane man upon one subject, if he commits an act which is a crime upon another subject, cannot be excused by partial insanity, because his partial insanity has no reference to the act in question. You must have an insanity which conduces to the act in question about which you are inquiring. You must have a form of disease. It must be a disease of the mind, & the disease of the mind must be previously existing before the act done which you are inquiring into, & you must have a disease of the mind which makes the man, by reason of that disease of the mind, incapable of judging whether or not the act which he does at the time when he does it is a wrong act for him to

229 xii. ———.]—In a trial for murder where a defence was pleaded that the accused was at the time the acts labelled were committed insane & labouring under insane delusions, which impelled him to commit the said acts. The Lord Justice-General charged the jury that—(1) In order to exempt from criminal prosecution & liability to punishment, insanity must amount to such an alienation of reason that the panel did not know the nature or quality of the act which he was committing, or that if he did know its nature & quality, he was in such a state of mind that he was not aware that it was wrong. (2) That mental unsoundness, while it may not exist in such a degree as to be pleadable in bar of trial, or to exempt from punishment, may still be present in such a degree as to reduce the offence from a higher to a lower class, e.g., from murder to culpable homicide.—H.M. ADVOCATE v. MCCLINTON (1902), 4 Adam, 1.—SCOT.

e. ———.]—Legal, not medical test to be applied.]—Penal Code, s. 84, down the legal test of responsibility in cases of alleged unsoundness of mind. It is by this test, as distinguished from the medical test, that the criminality of an act is to be determined. The accused killed his two young children with a hatchet. The reason given for the crime was that, while he was laid up with fever, the crying of the children annoyed him. It was alleged that the fever had made him irritable & sensitive to sound, but it did not appear that he was delirious at the time of perpetrating the crime. There was no attempt at concealment, & the accused made a full confession:—Held: as the accused was conscious of the nature of his act, he must be presumed to have been conscious of its criminality. He was therefore guilty of murder.—R. v. LAKSHMAN DAGDU (1886), 1 L. R. 10 Bom. 512.—IND.

do. You must see that deft.'s disease of the mind was formed before the act was done. You must see that the effect of that disease of the mind is such as to disable him from distinguishing between whether, in doing the act which he is accused of, he is doing a wrong act or a right act for him to do, I say for him to do, because there are many people who know that an act done is a wrong act in itself, but do not know that it is a wrong act for them individually to do. Therefore the man who believes that it is a right act for him to do is punishable, but the man who believes that it is a wrong act for him to do is punishable (ALDERSON, B.).—PATE'S CASE (1850), 8 State Tr. N. S. 1.

The proper direction must follow the rules in M'Naghten's Case, No. 229, ante.—R. v. TRUE (1922), 127 L. T. 561; 27 Cox, C. C. 287; 16 Cr. App. Rep. 164, C. C. A.

240. (c) Uncontrollable Impulse.

241. It may therefore be said that, under the provisions of Penal Code, s. 84, exemption from criminal liability by reason of unsoundness of mind extends as well to cases where insanity affects the offender's will & emotions as to those where it affects his cognitive faculties.—R. v. The evidence was that he appeared to be fond of the child, but that his wife was a drunkard, & one of the medical witnesses called gave it as his opinion that, looking to the state of the accused's home, his wife's intemperance, the fact that he committed the deed, & the fact that he was not drunk, he must have been temporarily insane at the time. The medical evidence generally, & the other evidence, however, tended to show that the accused was not suffering from any mental disease.—Held: if the accused knew that he was killing his child, & knew that it was wrong, he could not be acquitted on the ground of insanity, & that it was no defence that he had a fixed idea to kill his child, his wife, & himself, & suffered from an impulse to do so which he could not control.—R. v. #### (d) Moral Insanity.

250. Not a defence.—The delusions which indicate a defect of sanity such as will relieve a person from criminal responsibility, are delusions of the senses, or such as relate to facts or objects, not mere wrong notions or impressions of a moral nature; & the aberration must be mental, not moral, to affect the intellect of the individual. It is not enough that they show a diseased or depraved state of mind, or an aberration of the moral feelings, the sense of right & wrong being still, although it may be perverted, yet not destroyed; & the theory of a moral insanity, or insanity of the moral feelings, while the sense of right & wrong remains, is not to be reconciled with the legal doctrine on the subject.

A medical man cannot be asked whether, having heard the evidence, he is of opinion that prisoner was sane or insane at the time of the doing of the act, as it is the very question the jury are to determine.—R. v. BURTON (1863), 3 F. & F. 772.

251. ————.]—Moral aspect not to be considered—Belief in right to kill.—Where, upon a trial for murder of a woman the plea of insanity is set up, the question for the jury is, did prisoner do the act under a delusion, believing it to be other than it was. If he knew what he was doing, & that it was likely to cause death, & was contrary to the law of God & man, & that the law directed that persons who did such acts should be punished, he is guilty of murder.

If his real motive was that he conceived himself to have been ill-used, & either from jealousy of the man who was preferred to him, or from a desire of revenge upon her, committed the act, that would be murder. Those were the very passions which the law required men to control, & if the deed was done under the influence of those passions there is no doubt that it was murder. Prisoner claimed to exercise the same power over a wife as he could lawfully exercise over a chattel, but that was not a delusion, nor like a delusion. It was the conclusion of a man who had arrived at results different from those generally arrived at & contrary to the laws of God & man, but it was no delusion (MARTIN, B.).—R. v. TOWNLEY (1863), 3 F. & F. 839.

C. Onus of Proof.

253. Lies on the defence—Must be proved affirmatively.—(1) Where the defence of insanity is set up, in order to warrant the jury in acquitting prisoner, it must be proved affirmatively that he is insane; if the fact be left in doubt, & if the crime charged in the indictment be proved, it is their duty to convict him.

(2) Every man must be presumed to be responsible for his acts till the contrary is clearly shown. It is dangerous ground to take to say a man must be insane because men fail to discern the motive for his act. It would be a most dangerous doctrine to lay down that because a man committed a desperate offence with the certainty of instant death, or the certainty of future punishment before him, he was therefore insane (ROLFE, B.).—R. v. STOKES (1848), 3 Car. & Kir. 185.

254. ————.]—Where prisoner sets up insanity as a ground of defence, one cardinal rule is that the burden of proving his innocence on that ground rests on the party accused. The question in such a case for the jury, is not whether prisoner was of sound mind, but whether he had made out to their satisfaction that he was not of sound mind.

The jury may come to a conclusion on this point from the conduct & acts of accused shortly before & down to the commission of the alleged crime. Although insanity on one point, for instance, a delusion as to property, will not exempt a party from responsibility, the fact is not immaterial in considering his responsibility at another time and on another subject. The want of motive justified in returning a verdict under Penal Code, s. 84.—R. v. NOBIN CHUNDER BANERJEE (1873), 13 B. L. R. 20.—IND.

1. ————.]—How far rebutted by admissions of prisoner.—On a trial for murder, counsel for the accused admitted the shooting, that primarily such shooting amounted to murder, & that the only defence to be raised was insanity. When referring to the evidence given by the accused himself the judge said: "He says he knew at the time he shot him he was shooting him, & he knew he was doing wrong. He said afterwards he lost all knowledge of what took place. He knew it was contrary to the law of the land to shoot H."—Held: the reference to the accused's evidence would convey to the jury that that incriminating consciousness which it lay on the Crown to establish, was admitted by the accused, whereas his actual admissions did not go to that length.—R. v. CURRAN (1922), 22 S. R. N. S. W. 405.—AUS.

between right & wrong. The defence of insanity is established, if it be proved that the accused had, by reason of such mental disease, lost the power of will to control his conduct in reference to the particular act charged as an offence. The capacity of the accused to control his own conduct must be presumed until the contrary is proved. Whether there does exist a diseased condition of mind which absolutely prevents the sufferer from controlling his conduct is a question of fact.—R. v. HAY (1899), 16 S. C. 290.—S. AF.

The defence was, that deft. was insane:—Held: in view of the fact that the law presumes every man sane, the burden of establishing insanity is on the accused.—R. v. ANDERSON (1914), 26 W. L. R. 783.—CAN.

253 ii. ————.]—The onus of proving the plea of insanity as a defence to a charge of murder is on the accused, & it is not error for the trial judge to tell the jury that if the accused fails to prove to their entire satisfaction that he was insane, or leaves the question in doubt, his defence fails.—*R. v. for the commission of the crime, & its being committed under circumstances which renders detection inevitable, are important points for the consideration of the jury, when coupled with evidence of insanity on any other particular point.

To ask a witness whether, in his opinion, prisoner is capable of judging between right & wrong, is an improper question, for that is what no witness thought of, or is prepared to answer.

Every person committing an outrage on the person or property of another, must be, in the first instance, taken to be a responsible being. A man going about the world marrying, dealing, & acting as if he was sane must be presumed to be sane till he proves the contrary (ROLFE, B.).—R. v. LAYTON (1849), 4 Cox, C. C. 149.

256. — Not proper for Crown to call evidence of insanity—Information to be given to defence of such evidence.—(1) No general rule can be laid down at which stage of the trial it becomes the duty of the prosecution to proffer evidence of sanity, when there is reason to believe that insanity will be relied upon as a defence.

(2) The onus of proving insanity is upon the defence, it is not for the Ct. of Criminal Appeal but for the jury to deal with the question of prisoner's sanity or insanity (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).

(3) It is not proper for the Crown to call evidence of insanity, but any evidence in the possession of the Crown should be placed at the disposal of prisoner's counsel to be used by him if he thinks fit (per CUR.).—R. v. SMITH (1910), 6 Cr. App. Rep. 19, C. C. A.

g. In general.—On the defence of insanity on a charge of murder it is a misdirection, justifying a new trial, for the judge to instruct the jury that such defence must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Insanity, as a defence on such charge, may be found upon a substantial preponderance in the weight of evidence. The degree of proof required is not as great as that required to overcome the presumption of innocence in an accused.—R. v. CLARK, [1921] 2 W. W. R. 446; 61 S. C. R. 608; 59 D. L. R. 12.—CAN.

h. —.]—Circumstances calculated to induce the mental condition of insanity at the time of the commission of an offence may always be admitted to evidence the probability of such affection; the only limitation is that the circumstance be in itself capable in some degree of producing such an effect that it came to the person's knowledge & that some further foundation for probability be laid by other evidence, e.g., medical testimony, that there was a diseased mental condition.—R. v. HAWKES (1915), 32 W. L. R. 720; 9 W. W. R. 445; 25 D. L. R. 631.—CAN.

k. —.]—Soundness or unsoundness of mind is a fact which is to be judged of not merely or mainly as a question of law or of science, but on the ordinary rules which apply in daily life. . . . If it turns out that this man is able to conduct himself with propriety in the ordinary rules of life, that he is not excluded from the confidence of his fellows, & that there is no reason to distrust his sanity, then you will have advanced nine-tenths of the distance towards the result you desire to reach. . . . There is a further step which you must take, & it is here that the great difficulty & importance of the case lies. There are states of mind which indicate unsoundness or insanity, which do not manifest themselves in ordinary life, but only on particular occasions, & in relation to special subjects. These are very exceptional instances. But if a man is clearly proved to labour under insane delusions, he is not of sound mind. Now, that the prisoner here laboured under a strong delusion about his mother is certain; & the question is, was it an insane delusion?—H.M. Advocate v. Mackinn (1876), 3 Couper, 258.—SCOT.

l. What is insufficient—Mere delusion—Not acted on immediately.—Whether a person who, under an insane delusion as to the existing facts, commits an offence in consequence thereof, is to be therefore excused, depends on the nature of the delusion. If he labours under a partial delusion only, & is not in other respects insane, he must be considered in the same situation as to responsibility as if the facts, one & declined to plead to the other, the plea of not guilty was entered for him by statute, with the assent of counsel who appeared for him. The case being then opened, & the first witness examined, & it being then set up by his counsel in the course of the case that he was insane now, or not in a fit state to be tried :—Held : the proper time for making that suggestion was before prisoner pleaded, & had it so been made, a jury should have been empannelled to try the question whether he was sane now & in a fit state to be tried, but as the trial had been begun, & it would be manifestly inconvenient now to recommence the trial of the collateral issue, & as, moreover, it appeared that the evidence as to prisoner's present sanity was very much mixed up with the general question of his sanity, it was open to the ct. under Criminal Lunatics Act, 1800 (c. 94), to take the whole of the evidence, & then leave to the jury both questions as to prisoner's state of mind at the time of the act, & at the time of trial.

There being no evidence of prisoner's insanity previous to the act of homicide, & all the evidence of it being that of medical men who had seen him since the act, & their opinion being that his insanity was chronic, & that therefore he was insane at the time of the act, because he was insane now ; but all the circumstances of the act of homicide, showing great premeditation, preparation, & design, especially with a view to disguise & escape, & his subsequent conduct, showing a consciousness that he had broken the law & incurred a capital penalty, the whole of the circumstances were left to the jury upon both issues, with a strong direction that if they were not satisfied that the prisoner did not know of the nature of the act, & did not now understand the nature of the proceedings, they should find him guilty.

A prisoner being arraigned in the name of F., said "I object to that name. That is not my name. My name is S." :—Held : the name was immaterial & could be amended if necessary.—R. v. SOUTHEY (1865), 4 F. & F. 864.

268. — Eccentricity.—Knowledge shown by resisting arrest.—On a trial for murder, the defence of insanity in the evidence showing a great amount of senseless extravagance & absurd eccentricity of conduct, coupled with habits of excessive intemperance, causing fits of delirium tremens, prisoner, however, not having been labouring under the effects of such a fit at the time of the act, & the circumstances & in speaking showing sense & deliberation, & a perfect understanding of the nature of the act :—Held : the evidence was not sufficient to support the defence, as it rather tended to show wilful excesses & extreme folly than mental incapacity.

A prisoner trying to resist arrest, shows that he is well aware that he has committed an act which in law is criminal (ERLE, C.J.).—R. v. LEIGH (1866), 4 F. & F. 915.

269. — Frenzied state of mind.—Prisoner was tried for murder upon an indictment & at the same time upon a coroner's inquisition. At the trial the jury found the prisoner guilty, but added a rider to their verdict that at the time she committed the act she was in a frenzied state of mind :—Held : this did not amount to a verdict of insanity.

The coroner's jury had returned a verdict of wilful murder against prisoner, but added a rider that they all agreed that she was not responsible for what she did. At the trial the judge refused to admit evidence of this :—Held : the rider was no part of the inquisition, & evidence of it was rightly excluded at the trial.—R. v. HARDING (1908), 25 T. L. R. 139 ; 1 Cr. App. Rep. 219, C. C. A.

270. — Mere delusion.—Evidence of a mere delusion may not be evidence of insanity on a charge of murder.

The ct. is not entitled to express an opinion on a jury's recommendation to mercy.—R. v. HARPER (1913), 9 Cr. App. Rep. 41, C. C. A.

271. — Mental deficiency only.—Mental deficiency does not necessarily entitle a jury to return a special verdict on the ground of insanity. The jury had evidence before them which justified them in finding that applt. was not insane in the legal sense ; at the same time they considered him to be mentally deficient. All men who are sane are not of equal mental ability ; the verdict means that applt. was below the ordinary level of sane people, though not across the border line of sanity. It is only in exceptional circumstances that words amount to sufficient provocation. If words alone would amount to such provocation a preference expressed for another man would be enough (DARLING, J.).—R. v. ALEXANDER (1913), 109 L. T. 745 ; 23 Cox, C. C. 604 ; 9 Cr. App. Rep. 139 ; 77 J. P. Jo. 483, C. C. A.

with respect to which the delusion exists, were real. The accused was convicted of having murdered his brother-in-law, a lad of 8 years old. In his confession to the magistrate the accused stated that he had seen the deceased arrange a clandestine meeting between his wife & a young man, whom he actually saw enter his wife's room some time before midnight & again leave it after a considerable interval, & that in consequence of what he saw he had not a wink of sleep that night & was devoid of his senses at the time he killed the deceased :—Held : there was no doubt the accused did actually believe he had ocular proof of his wife's infidelity, & if he had acted under the immediate influence of such a delusion, the estimate of his guilt must be made upon the basis of the actual existence of the facts in regard to which the delusion existed, & had the accused acted under the immediate influence of such provocation his guilt would have been greatly reduced ; but, as he did not do so, his offence was murder under Penal Code, s. 302, nor was there any ground for the application of sect. 84 of that Code.—GHATU PRAMANIK v. R. (1901), 1 L. R. 28 Calc. 613.—IND.

271 i. — Mental deficiency only.—The judge, in a trial for murder, charged the jury that there was sometimes a state of mind bordering on insanity, but not amounting to it, which would entitle a jury, if they saw fit, to return a verdict of culpable homicide against the panel instead of that of murder, though if the crime was proved it would not entitle them to return a verdict of acquittal.—H. M. ADVOCATE v. FERGUSON (1881), 9 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 9 ; 19 Sc. L. R. 341.—SCOT.

unhinged by long course of annoyance.—The state of a panel's mind may be an element in enabling the jury to decide between murder & culpable homicide where not warranting acquittal on the ground of insanity. It having been proved that the panel's mind had been unhinged by long continued course of verbal annoyance, the jury found him guilty of culpable homicide in shooting a fellow-servant for "booming" at him.—H. M. ADVOCATE v. SMITH (1893), 1 Adam, 34.—SCOT.

n. — Mental state making prisoner only partially accountable for her acts.—At the trial of a woman upon a charge of murdering her child by choking it immediately after its birth, the judge directed the jury that they were entitled to find the panel guilty of culpable homicide, if they were of opinion upon the evidence that her mental state at the time when the injury was inflicted, though not warranting an acquittal on the ground of insanity, was such as to make her only partially accountable for her acts.—*H. 274. What may be sufficient—Epilepsy at the time of commission of crime.—Epilepsy, to sustain the defence of insanity, must be proved to have existed at the time of the commission of the crime. When that defence has been set up at the trial, it is only in exceptional circumstances that the ct. will hear any further evidence on that subject. If it is part of the defence that prisoner is insane at the time of the trial, it should be alleged that he is unfit to plead.—R. v. PERRY (1919), 14 Cr. App. Rep. 48, C. C. A.

275. — Liability to fits—Act done in a fit.—Where a person is in a state of mind in which she is liable to fits of madness, it is for the jury to consider whether the act done was during such a fit, though there is nothing before or after the act to indicate it, & though there is some evidence of design & malice. A medical witness should give his opinion as to the state of mind, not as to the responsibility of prisoner; the latter is for the jury, under the direction of the judge.—R. v. RICHARDS (1858), 1 F. & F. 87.

276. — — — — ——Where a married woman fondly attached to her children, & apparently most happy in her family, had poisoned two of them with some evidence of deliberation & design, but it appeared that there was insanity in her family, & from her demeanour before & after the act, which, although not wholly irrational, yet was strangely erratic & excited, & from recent antecedents & the presence of certain exciting causes of insanity, & her own account of her sensations, the medical men were of opinion that she was labouring under actual cerebral disease, & that she was in a paroxysm of insanity at the time of the act, this was left to the jury as evidence on which they might rightly find her not guilty on the ground of insanity.—R. v. VYSE (1862), 3 F. & F. 247.

his wife, who had been unfaithful, & whom he had killed by cutting her throat with a razor so as almost to sever the head from the body. The jury were charged that: (1) Even although the act might not have been long planned, the nature of the weapon & the force with which it was used made the act wilful murder apart from special defence. (2) In a sane man neither jealousy nor drink nor both combined could make such a crime less than murder. (3) The rule of law, that there might be present such a degree of insanity as to modify though not to destroy criminal responsibility could only be applied if the jury were satisfied that the panel suffered from some mental debility amounting to brain disease—that the jury must be satisfied that the panel had so brooded over his wife's conduct that, apart altogether from the ordinary effects of drink or jealousy & anger, his mind had become so morbidly affected before they could bring in a verdict of culpable homicide.—H.M. ADVOCATE v. ALKIN (1902), 4 Adam, 88.—SCOT.

p. — Mental degeneracy.—At a trial of a person on a charge of murder, direction to the jury that mental degeneracy not amounting to insanity at the date when the alleged murder was committed is not an extenuating circumstance which can reduce the crime from that of murder to that of culpable homicide.—H.M. ADVOCATE v. HIGGINS, [1914] S. C. (J.) 1.—SCOT.

q. — Under delusion.—If a person does a criminal act under a delusion, & if the crime was the result solely of such delusion, & would not otherwise have been done, a plea of insanity is a good defence.—R. v. VAN DER VEEN (1909), T. S. 853.—S. AF.

277. — Exhausting disease causing delusions.—A married woman, having killed her husband immediately after an apparent recovery from a disease, the result of child-birth, which caused a great loss of blood & exhausted the vessels of the brain, & thus so weakened its power & so tended to produce insane delusions of the senses, which, while suffering under such disease, she complained of, & which, by her own account, had now renewed at the time of the act of homicide although they were not such as would lead to it:—Held: there was evidence from which a jury might properly find that she was not in such a state of mind at the time of the act as to know its nature or be accountable for it.—R. v. LAW (1862), 2 F. & F. 222.

278. — Hereditary tendency to insanity.—To prove a plea of insanity, evidence that the grandfather of the person had been insane may be adduced, after it has been proved by medical testimony that such disease is often hereditary.

It is a matter of fact, & not a matter of law, that insanity is often hereditary in a family; but I think you should prove that, in the first instance, by the testimony of medical men (MAULE, J.).—R. v. TUCHET (1844), 4 L. T. O. S. 50; 1 Cox, C. C. 103.

E. Method of Proof.

279. Need not be scientific evidence.—It is a mistake to suppose that in order to satisfy a jury of insanity, scientific evidence must be adduced. If the existence of facts is such as to indicate an unsound state of mind that is quite sufficient (BRETT, L.J.).—R. v. DART (1878), 14 Cox, C. C. 143.

280. Evidence on symptoms of insanity.—On a trial where the defence is insanity, a witness of medical skill may be asked whether such & such appearances, proved by other witnesses, in his judgment, symptoms of insanity. whether he can be asked, whether, from the other testimony given, the act with which prisoner is charged, is in his opinion, an act of insanity, which is the very point to be decided by the jury.—*R. v. r. Evidence on condition of mind at time of act—Medical evidence of opinion.—The prisoner was convicted of attempting to murder his wife. The defence of insanity was set up, & in support thereof the general conduct & behaviour of the prisoner about the time of the commission of the crime, & the evidence of two medical practitioners, who stated that they inferred from that conduct & behaviour that the prisoner was insane, was relied on. The jury found the prisoner guilty, stating, in reply to a question of the learned judge, that they had considered the evidence on the defence of insanity. The prisoner appealed on a certificate of the judge to the Ct. of Criminal Appeal.—Held: the finding of the jury against the defence of insanity not only was not unreasonable, but was reasonable, & therefore the appeal should be dismissed.

290. ———.]—In a case of stabbing, where prisoner has used a deadly weapon, the fact that prisoner was drunk does not at all alter the nature of the case; but if prisoner had intemperately used an instrument, not in its nature a deadly weapon, at a time when he was drunk, the fact of his being drunk might induce the jury to less strongly infer a malicious intent in him at the time.

Prisoner's being intoxicated does not alter the nature of the offence. If a man choose to get drunk, it is his own voluntary act; it is very different from a madness which is not caused by any act of the person. If this be proved, the presumption that he intends to do grievous bodily harm is rebutted.

"In the first place, every one is presumed to know the consequences of his acts. If he be insane, that knowledge is not presumed. Insanity is not pleaded here, but where it is part of the essence of a crime that a motive, a particular motive, shall exist in the mind of the man who does the act, the law declares that if the mind at that time is so obscure by drink, if the reason is dethroned & the man is incapable therefore of forming that intent, it justifies the reduction of the charge from murder to manslaughter":—Held: the direction was right.—*R. v. The judge directed the jury that if they were of opinion that the panel was watching the children with no evil intention, & that under the influence of some momentary hallucination induced by drunkenness she had placed the children on the fire, the jury were entitled to return a verdict of culpable homicide.—*H.M. In defence it was contended that the intoxicated condition of the accused at the time when the assault was committed, reduced the crime from murder to culpable homicide. The jury were directed that the accused was guilty of murder unless at the time of the assault he was, owing to drunkenness, in such condition that he had not the intention & could not form the intention of doing serious injury to his wife.—*R. v. to the class of case with which the ct. was there dealing.

Evidence of drunkenness which renders the accused incapable of forming the specific intent essential to constitute the crime ought to be taken into consideration, with the other facts proved, in order to determine whether he had that intent.

The test of criminal responsibility is not the same in the case of drunkenness as in the case of insanity, & upon a plea of drunkenness where insanity is not pleaded, the jury should not be asked to consider whether, if the accused knew what he was doing, he knew also that he was doing wrong.

Upon an indictment for murder it was proved or admitted that accused ravished a girl of thirteen years of age & in furtherance of the act of rape placed his hand upon her mouth & his thumb upon her throat, thereby causing death by suffocation. The sole defence was a plea of drunkenness. The jury were directed at the trial that, if they were satisfied by evidence that accused was so drunk that he did not know what he was doing or did not know that he was doing wrong, the defence of drunkenness succeeded to the extent of reducing the crime of manslaughter. Accused was convicted of murder & sentenced to death. The Ct. of Criminal Appeal substituted a verdict of manslaughter upon the ground that the judge was wrong in applying to a case of drunkenness the test of insanity, & that he ought to have directed the jury in accordance with the rule laid down in R. v. Meade, No. 303, ante:—Held: the rule in R. v. Meade, No. 303, ante, did not apply; drunkenness was no defence in this case unless it could be established that the accused at the time of committing rape was so drunk that he was incapable of forming the intent to commit it, which was not alleged, inasmuch as the death resulted from a succession of acts, the rape & the act of violence causing suffocation, which could not be regarded independently of each other; the trial judge was mistaken in applying a case of drunkenness not amounting to insanity, but that, read as a whole, the summing up did not amount to a misdirection; & the conviction of murder should be restored.—

doing actual harm to the prosecutor with intent. The learned judge directed the jury that before they could find the prisoner guilty on either count they must be satisfied that the intent as charged had been proved, but that if they thought that such intent had not been proved they might still find him guilty of causing actual bodily harm under such circumstances that if death had been caused he would have been guilty of manslaughter. The jury found the prisoner not guilty of the crimes charged in the indictment, upon the ground that he was incapable of forming an intent, but guilty of the crime of causing bodily harm under such circumstances that if death had been caused he would have been guilty of manslaughter:—Held: the direc-

(2) If a person receive a blow, & immediately avenges it with any instrument he may happen to have in his hand, & death ensue, this will be only manslaughter, provided the fatal blow is to be attributed to the passion of anger arising from the previous provocation. The law requires that there should be provocation; & that the fatal blow should be clearly traced to the passion arising from that provocation. Therefore, if, from the circumstances, it appear that the party, before any provocation given, intended to use a deadly weapon towards any one who might assault him, this would show that a fatal blow given afterwards was not to be attributed to the provocation, & the crime would therefore be murder.

(3) If a man be drunk, this is no excuse for any crime he may commit; but where provocation by a blow has been given to a person who kills another with a weapon which he happens to have in his hand, the drunkenness of prisoner may be considered on the question, whether prisoner was excited by passion, or acted from malice; as, also, it may be on the question, whether expressions used by prisoner manifested a deliberate purpose,

In a criminal case an inferior officer must be held justified in obeying the directions of a superior, not obviously improper or contrary to law, that is, if an inferior officer acts honestly upon what he might not unreasonably deem to be the effect of the orders of his superior, he is not guilty of culpable negligence, those orders not appearing to him, at the time, to be improper or contrary to law (WILLES, J.).—*R. v. (2) Whenever necessity forces a man to do an illegal act it justifies him, because no man can be guilty of a crime without the will & intention of his mind. A man who is absolutely by natural necessity forced, his will does not go along with the act; & therefore in the case of natural necessity, if a man is forced to commit acts of high treason, if it appears really force, & such as human nature could not be expected to resist, & the jury are of that opinion, the man is not then guilty of high treason. In a case of homicide if a man was attacked, & in danger, & so in a variety of instances, natural necessity certainly justifies. As to civil necessity, it must be imminent extreme necessity; there must be no other remedy to apply to for redress; it must be very imminent, it must be very extreme, & in the whole they do, they must appear clearly to do it with a view of preserving the society & themselves, with a view of preserving the whole (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).

(a) In General.

337. Mere fact of marriage raises no presumption.—The circumstance that a married woman at the time of the felonious reception of stolen goods charged against her, was living with her husband, travelling with him from place to place, raises no presumption of marital coercion, though it is not shown that she received them out of his presence.

This disputable presumption of law exists in misdemeanours as well as in felonies, & the question for the jury is the same in both cases.

The doctrine in question applies to the crime of robbery with violence.

b. — By evidence that the wife acted as free agent.—Where an act of dishonesty has been committed by a wife in the presence of her husband, there is a presumption of law that the wife acted under the coercion & control of her husband. together for a joint crime & it appears they had lived together for some months as husband & wife, having with them an infant who passed as their child, it is not necessary for the woman to give evidence of her marriage in order to entitle her to the benefit of the doctrine of coercion, although the indictment does not describe her as a married woman.—R. v. TORPEY (1871), 12 Cox, C. C. 45.

347. —[Applt. was convicted of stealing money. The stealing took place in the presence of applt.'s husband. The jury were told that although there was a presumption that the wife was acting under the coercion of her husband, that presumption might be negatived if they thought that the husband & wife were acting in collusion:—Held: the evidence of collusion might be evidence of coercion, & as this was not explained to the jury, the conviction would be set aside.—R. v. CAROUBI (1912), 107 L. T. 415; 76 J. P. 262; 23 Cox, C. C. 177; 7 Cr. App. Rep. 149, C. C. A.

348. —[Applt., a woman, & a man named R., were indicted together with stealing two suits of clothes at a pawnbroker's shop. It appeared that all the acts proved against applt. upon which the prosecution relied were done in the presence of R. Both prisoners were convicted. During the trial a detective was stating that he thought there was some connection between prisoners, but R. objected to this evidence, & the matter was not then pursued. Subsequent inquiry showed that prisoners were married to each other. The woman appealed. Applt. by her counsel on the appeal claimed the benefit of the presumption that where a wife commits a crime wholly in the presence of her husband she is deemed to be acting under his coercion & should be acquitted although she had not raised this point either at the trial or by her notice of appeal. The Crown did not suggest that the non-disclosure of the relationship at the trial was done in order to take advantage of this point on appeal, the presumption being rebuttable. The ct. gave effect to the contention of applt., & quashed the conviction.

It is only a prima facie presumption, & we are of opinion that it ought not to be extended (ISAACS, C.J.).—R. v. GREEN (1913), 110 L. T. 240; 78 J. P. 224; 30 T. L. R. 170; 24 Cox, C. C. 41; 9 Cr. App. Rep. 228, C. C. A.

349. —[Applt. was convicted of conversion of money entrusted her for a certain purpose, & of falsification of accounts, which she kept as servant of the Post Office. Her husband was the postmaster, & he was convicted with her. It was proved that she was acting independently, & not under her husband's coercion:—Held: she was rightly convicted; the omission by counsel of taking a point of law does not affect the duty of the judge to call the attention of the jury to it.

Semle: the presumption of coercion in the case of joint crimes committed by a wife in the presence of her husband extends to misdemeanours.

A married woman who is alleged to have committed an offence in the presence of her husband is presumed to have acted under his coercion. The principle is that though the mere fact that two persons jointly charged with a crime are married, creates no presumption of coercion, yet as a general rule, the husband's presence does raise a presumption of his coercion, & excuses the wife. This presumption may be rebutted. If it appear that she was principally instrumental, acting voluntarily, & not by coercion, even though the husband was present & concurred, she will be guilty (AVORY, J.).—*R. v. d. — Effect of statutory limitation.—The effect of Criminal Code Act, 1893, s. 24 (2), providing that no presumption shall be made that a married woman committing an offence does so under compulsion only because she commits it in the presence of her husband, is to wholly deprive a married woman of the defence of coercion by her husband where such coercion does not amount to compulsion by threats within the meaning of sub-sect. 1 of the same section; the defence of marital coercion, as it existed before the code, having depended wholly upon the presumption from the presence of the husband, & not having been available in the case of an offence committed by a married woman by the command of her husband, but in his absence. Notwithstanding that husband & wife are for some purposes one person only in law, they are legally capable of acting a crime, so as to make the acts & declarations of each, where the crime has been committed in pursuance of the concert, evidence against the other to the same extent as in the case of a crime concerted between other persons.—*R. v. n. — Wife only indicted—Effect of statute on presumption.]—A married woman was indicted before the District Ct. for that she, "appearing, acting & behaving as the mistress of a certain house," unlawfully did keep, maintain, & use the said house as a common bawdy-house." The evidence showed that accused lived with her husband & three children in a certain dwelling-house, & used a room in an outhouse at the rear of the dwelling-house for purposes of prostitution, inviting men into it at night during a period of several months. The dwelling & outhouse were both the property of the husband. Beyond the fact that the husband lived with her in the dwelling, & was generally at home, there was no evidence that he knew of his wife's misconduct, & there was no evidence whatever that the husband had by threats, or by personal violence, or in any other way coerced the accused into leading a life of prostitution. The District Judge, in summing up, told the jury that there was no evidence whatever that the accused was acting under the compulsion or coercion of her husband. The jury brought in a special verdict, viz.: (1) That the accused kept the room referred to for the purpose of prostitution; (2) that she was acting under the coercion of her husband; & (3) that she kept the room for the purpose aforesaid with the knowledge & consent of her husband. The Crown Prosecutor contended that the second finding was perverse, & the third not only perverse, but also no answer to the charge, & that a verdict of "Guilty" should be entered. The District Judge held that he was bound to accept the findings, & directed a verdict of "Not guilty" to be recorded, & discharged the accused:—Held: it appeared from the case that the jury, by the word "coercion," in the second finding, meant "compulsion" within the meaning of Criminal Code, s. 24, & in that finding they had disregarded the direction of the judge, & also the want of evidence of such compulsion; but that, as the jury had found the legal excuse, & the special verdict was not insensible, judgment of acquittal had been rightly entered. The effect of Criminal Code, s. 24, was to put an end altogether to the doctrine of excuse on the ground of coercion by a husband; the jury had not found that the act was done under "compulsion" as defined by sect. 24; the second & third findings were therefore insensible & irrelevant.—*R. v. O. 1887 (c. 194), s. 112 (2), even if the presumption that the sale was made through the compulsion of the husband had not been removed by the Code, s. 13, it would have been rebutted by the circumstances.—*R. v. #### PART I. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 1.—

A. (a).

419 i. Treason.]—A person who, at a meeting, seconds a resolution which contains such a statement as is provided in War Precaution Regs. 1915, Reg. 28, “likely to prejudice recruiting of any of H.M. Forces” is equally guilty of the offence with the mover, but that the chairman of a meeting who merely puts such a resolution to the vote of the meeting is not guilty of the offence.—PEARCE v. JONES, SMITH v. JONES (1917), 23 C. L. R. 438.—AUS.

419 ii. —.]—If men are engaged in a treasonable purpose, & other men act with them & forward that purpose, though they may not be acquainted with the treasonable intentions of the party whose acts they are furthering, they will be traitors in the contemplation of the law, though they be ignorant of the treasonable intent. So that if a man, or body of men, be engaged in a treasonable purpose, any man who associates himself with them, who affords them his assistance & aid, though he may be ignorant of the treasonable intent, he would be guilty

423. — & trespass.]—In trespass & treason, the highest & the lowest offences, there are not any accessories, but all are principals, but in case of felony & in case of death, etc., there may be accessories.—ACCESSORY (NONE IN TREASON, ETC.) (1612), 12 Co. Rep. 81; 77 E. R. 1359.

424. —.]—(1) On an indictment for falsely arresting a man by a certain warrant, & thereby extorting divers sums of money, knowing the said warrant to be forged:—Qu.: whether the forgery be matter of description or of aggravation only.

(2) A fact which would make one accessory in felony, in treason & in trespass makes him a principal (HOLT, C.J.).—R. v. TRACY (1703), 6 Mod. Rep. 30; 87 E. R. 795.

Annotation:—Generally, Mentd. R. v. Daniell (1704), 6 Mod. Rep. 99.

425. Misdemeanour.]—ACCESSORY (NONE IN TREASON, ETC.), No. 423, ante.

426. —.]—R. v. TRACY, No. 424, ante.

427. —.]—If A. counsel & encourage B. to set fire to a malt-house, & B. attempt to set it on fire, both may be jointly indicted as principals for the misdemeanour of attempting to set the malt-house on fire, although A. was not present at the time of the attempt.—R. v. CLAYTON (1843), 1 Car. & Kir. 128.

Annotation:—Apld. Gould v. Houghton, [1921] 1 K. B. 509.

428. —.]—On an indictment for obtaining money, etc., under false pretences, a party who has concurred & assisted in the fraud may be convicted as principal, though not present at the time of making the pretence & obtaining the money.

In misdemeanours all parties are principals, whether present or not (per CUR.).—MOLAND'S CASE (1843), 2 Mood. C. C. 276, C. C. R.

Annotation:—Apld. Gould v. Houghton, [1921] 1 K. B. 509.

429. —.]—Prisoner & one J. were indicted for a misdemeanour in uttering a counterfeit coin. The uttering was effected by J. in the absence of prisoner, but the jury found that they were both engaged, on the evening on which the uttering took place, in the common purpose of uttering counterfeit shillings, & that, in pursuance of that common purpose J. uttered the coin specified in the indictment:—Held: prisoner was rightly convicted as a principal, there being no accessories in misdemeanour.—GREENWOOD'S CASE (1852), 2 Den. 453; 21 L. J. M. C. 127; 19 L. T. O. S. 191; 16 J. P. 356; 16 Jur. 390; 5 Cox, C. C. 521, C. C. R.

Annotations:—Consd. Gould v. Houghton, [1921] 1 K. B. 509. Refd. R. v. Coney (1882), 8 Q. B. D. 534.

430. —.]—B. was summoned before justices for aiding & abetting S. to obtain money by false pretences, & both S. & B. were committed to take their trial, S. on the charge of attempting to obtain money by false pretences, & B. on the charge of aiding & abetting S. to commit that offence. At sessions, an indictment against S. & B. for jointly attempting to obtain money by false pretences was preferred, without the leave required by Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (c. 17), & found of high treason.—R. v. O'DONOHUE (1848), 7 State Tr. N. S. 1091.—IR.

419 iii. —.]—But in high treason all are principals; the man who incites to the commission of war, or any other species of treason, is held to be himself guilty & to stand in the same degree of guilt with the person who actually commits the crime of treason. He who incites to war, if war be levied, himself levies war within the meaning of the phrase, & according to the authority of the law.—R. v. MEAGHER (1848), 7 State Tr. N. S. 1091.—IR.

by the grand jury, upon which S. & B. were tried jointly, & S. acquitted & B. found guilty. At the trial the objection was taken, & overruled, that the indictment, having been preferred against B. for an offence upon which he had not been committed for trial, should be quashed; & after verdict another objection was taken & overruled, that S., the principal, having been acquitted, B., an aider & abettor, could not be found guilty:—Held: (1) sect. 1 of the Act was inapplicable, as that applied only to the offence of "obtaining money or other property by false pretences," & not to the offence of "attempting to obtain money or other property by false pretences"; (2) the second objection was untenable, as in misdemeanour all were principals.—R. v. BURTON (1875), 32 L. T. 539; 39 J. P. 532; 13 Cox, C. C. 71, C. C. R.

Annotations:—As to (2) Consd. Gould v. Houghton, [1921] 1 K. B. 509. Refd. R. v. De Marney (1906), 71 J. P. 14; Du Cros v. Lambourne, [1907] 1 K. B. 40; Morris v. Tolman, [1923] 1 K. B. 166.

431. —[—]—An accessory before the fact to a misdemeanour, which includes offences punishable on summary conviction, is for the purpose of conviction to be regarded as a principal offender.

Applts., wholesale dealers, were charged with aiding & abetting G., a customer whom they had supplied with an article of food, in the offence, under Sale of Food & Drugs Acts, to which the latter pleaded guilty, of selling that article to resp., it being adulterated, but sold by G. as received from applts. It had been purchased by resp. from G. for test purposes, & by Sale of Food & Drugs Act, 1899 (c. 51), s. 19, a "prosecution under" those Acts in the above circumstances could not be instituted after the expiration of 28 days after the purchase. The proceedings against applts. had been instituted more than 28 days after:—Held: as applts. were accessories to G.'s offence, which was a misdemeanour, they were to be regarded as principals, & as such were entitled to the benefit of sect. 19 of the Act of 1899, & accordingly the proceedings against them were out of time.

For some purposes of indictment & procedure the law recognises accessories as such, in cases of high treason even, & I am of opinion that for similar purposes they are to be recognised in cases of misdemeanour (DARLING, J.).—GOULD & Co. v. HOUGHTON, [1921] 1 K. B. 509; 90 L. J. K. B. 369; 124 L. T. 566; 85 J. P. 93; 37 T. L. R. 291; 65 Sol. Jo. 344; 26 Cox, C. C. 693; 19 L. G. R. 85, D. C.

(b) Partial Presence.

432. Presence during whole transaction not essential—Forgery.—If several combine to forge an instrument, & each executes by himself a distinct part of the forgery, & they are not together when the instrument is completed, they are nevertheless all guilty as principals.—BINGLEY'S CASE (1821), Russ. & Ry. 446, C. C. R.

Annotations:—Apprvd. Kirkwood's Case (1831), 1 Mood. C. C. 304. Refd. Dade's Case (1831), 1 Mood. C. C. 307.

433. —[—]—Ignorance as to other persons engaged in the enterprise.—If several make distinct parts of a forged instrument, each is a principal, though he does not know by whom the other parts are executed, & though it is finished by one alone, in the absence of the others.—KIRKWOOD'S CASE (1831), 1 Mood. C. C. 304, C. C. R.

434. —[—]—[—]—The makers of the paper & plate respectively for the purpose of forging a note, afterwards filled up by a third person, are principals in the forgery with that person, though each executed his part in the absence of the others, & without knowing by whom the other parts are executed.—DADE'S CASE (1831), 1 Mood. C. C. 307, C. C. R.

435. —[—]—Larceny.—A., who intended to sell his mare, sent his servant with her to M. fair, the servant having no authority either to sell the mare or deal with her in any way. Prisoner asked the servant the price, & desired the servant to trot her out, & prisoner then went to two men, & having talked to them went away. These two men then came up & persuaded the servant to exchange the mare for a horse they had, & they would give £24 for the chop. They changed the saddles, & without giving any money rode away with the mare, leaving the servant with a horse of little value. Four days after prisoner sold the mare at B. stating that he had got her in a chop at M. fair:—Held: as the servant had the mere charge of the mare, & had no right to deal with the property in her, prisoner ought to be convicted of stealing her, provided that the jury were satisfied that prisoner was in league with the two other men, & that the three, by a fraud in which each of them was to take his part, & did take his part, induced the servant to part with the possession of the mare under colour of an exchange, but they intending all the while to steal the mare.—R. v. SHEPPARD (1830), 9 C. & P. 121.

436. —[—]—[—]—Where the evidence against two prisoners indicted for stealing oats was that A. took the oats from prosecutor's sacks & placed them under a cart, & B. came up a few minutes after & said "It is all right," & put the oats in a cart & took them to his house; on the objection that there was no evidence to connect the latter with the original taking:—Held: (1) both were principals in the larceny, & B. was not a receiver; (2) as the evidence showed one transaction in which both prisoners concurred, & both had been present at some parts of the transaction, both could be convicted as principals in the larceny.—R. v. KELLY & M'CARTHY (1847), 2 Car. & Kir. 379; 2 Cox, C. C. 171.

437. —[—]—Burglary.—(1) A room door was latched, & one person lifted the latch & entered the room & concealed himself for the purpose of committing a robbery there, which he afterwards accomplished. Two other persons were present with him at the time he lifted the latch, for the purpose of assisting him to enter, & screened him from observation by opening an umbrella:—Held: the two were in law parties to the breaking & entering, & were answerable for the robbery which took place afterwards, though they were not near the spot at the time when it was perpetrated.

(2) In burglary, where the breaking is one night, & the entry the night after, a person present at the breaking, though not present at the entering, is in law guilty of the whole offence.—R. v. JORDAN (1836), 7 C. & P. 432; 3 Nev. & M. M. C. 443.

PART I. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 1.— A. (b).

p. Presence during whole transaction not essential—False pretences.—A. & B. go together to C. A., in the presence of B., says to C., "We have a bit of gold for sale." Shortly afterwards, both being together, A. produced a bag of metal resembling gold & B. cleaned it, taking away some sand, etc., from the metal. C. then bought the whole supposing it to be gold & paid for it as such. One-third of the metal was brass:—Held: A. & B. were guilty of obtaining money under false pretences.—R. v. ENSWORTH & COCORAN (1854), 1 N. S. W. S. C. R. 25.—AUS.

Sect. 6.—Degrees of criminal liability: Sub-sect. 2, A.]

SUB-SECT. 2.—PRINCIPALS IN THE FIRST DEGREE.

A. Liability for Acts done by Agents.

See Sect. 3, ante.

438. When agent is innocent—Larceny.]—

(1) If a man does, by means of an innocent agent, an act which amounts to a felony, the employer, & not the agent, is accountable for the act.

Where a prisoner was indicted in one count, for stealing from the mine of one H. coal, the property of H., & in the same count, for stealing from the mines of thirty other proprietors coal, the property of each of such other proprietors, & it appeared that all the coal so alleged to have been stolen had been raised at one shaft:—Held: (2) prosecutor could not be called upon to elect on which charge he would go to the jury; (3) although, for the sake of convenience in trying prisoner, the judge might direct the jury to confine their attention to one particular charge, yet prosecutor was entitled to give evidence in support of all the charges laid in the indictment; (4) proof of such charges might be relied on, in order to show a felonious intent, as long as coal was gotten from one shaft, it was continuous taking, though the working was carried on by means of different levels & cuttings, & into the lands of different people.—R. v. BLEASDALE (1848), 2 Car. & Kir. 765.

Annotations:—As to (2) Refd. R. v. Rearden (1864), 4 F. & F. 76; R. v. Henwood (1870), 22 L. T. 486. As to (4) Refd. R. v. Firth (1869), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 172.

439. ———.]—(1) If A., by letter, desire B. an innocent agent, to write the name of "W." to a receipt of a Post Office order, & the innocent agent do it, believing that he is authorised to do it, A. is a principal in this forgery, & it makes no difference that by the letter A. says to B. that he is "at liberty" to sign the name of W. & does not in express words direct him to do so.

(2) If A. before the date of the letter sent to B. received by post a letter of an earlier date purporting to have come from W. & bearing postmarks of earlier date, from which it may be inferred that he was authorised to make use of the name of W., A.'s counsel, on his trial for the forgery, is entitled to state the contents of that letter, & to give it in evidence, with a view of showing that A. bonâ fide believed that he had the authority of W. for directing B. to sign the name of W. to the receipt.—R. v. CLIFFORD (1845), 2 Car. & Kir. 202.

440. ——— State of mind of agent question for jury.]—Prisoner induced a child, of the age of nine years, to rob his father's till, & give him the money. On an indictment as principal for this offence, it is a question for the jury whether the child was an innocent agent, or particeps criminis, & if the latter, prisoner must be acquitted.—R. v. MANLEY (1844), 3 L. T. O. S. 22; 1 Cox, C. C. 104.

441. ——— Forgery.]—Where prisoner utters an instrument with a forged indorsement or other writing, & a short time previously the instrument is shown to have been in his possession without such indorsement, etc., there is some evidence of forgery, although there be no proof of the indorsement being in prisoner's handwriting, or even though it be shown that he is unable to write.

Although prisoner might not be able to write himself, yet if he got any one in the street to write his name, he is as much guilty of forgery as if he wrote it himself (ERLE, J.).—R. v. JAMES (1849), 4 Cox, C. C. 90.

442. ——— Agent to more than one principal.]—(1) Three prisoners were indicted for feloniously engraving & making two parts of a promissory note. The indictment was framed on Forgery Act, 1830 (c. 66), s. 19. The plates were engraved by one who was an innocent agent in the transaction. It appeared that two of the prisoners only were present at the time when the order was given for the engraving of the plates, but they said they were employed to get it done by a third person, & there was some evidence to connect the third prisoner with the other two in subsequent parts of the transaction:—Held: in order to find all three guilty, the jury must be satisfied that they jointly employed the engraver, but it was not necessary that they should all be present when the order was given, as it would be sufficient if one first communicated with the other two, & that all three concurred in the employment of the engraver.

(2) Seemle: if prisoners, by means of the engraver, caused the plates to be engraved, they would be within the provisions of the statute, whether they knew the nature of the instrument engraved or not.—R. v. MAZEAU (1840), 9 C. & P. 676.

Annotation:—As to (1) Refd. R. v. Banner (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 295.

443. ———.]—Where two persons, one of whom was resident in England & the other abroad, were indicted for making & engraving a plate for the purposes of forgery, & it was proved that the one resident in England gave the order for the manufacture of the plate to an innocent agent, resident in England, who never saw the other until it was completed:—Held: they were both correctly charged as principals.

If a person does an act with a guilty intent, he is not the agent of any one. If he does it innocently, he is the agent of some person or persons, & if two have agreed to employ him, he is the agent of both. It makes no difference whether they were in England or elsewhere. When they have once agreed to do the thing, the act of one is the act of all, although the rest be absent at the time (ALDERSON, B.).—R. v. BULL & SCHMIDT (1845), 7 L. T. O. S. 7; 1 Cox, C. C. 281.

444. ——— Uttering forged note.]—(1) If A. knowingly delivers a forged bank note to B., who knowingly utters it accordingly, prisoner who delivered such note to be put off may be convicted of having disposed & put away the same on Bank of England Act, 1741 (c. 13), s. 11.

(2) If B. had been innocent & had not known that the note was forged the delivery of it by A. to B. would have been a guilty uttering of it by A. according to the doctrine that when an innocent person is employed for a criminal purpose the employer must be answerable (ROOKE, J.).—R. v. PALMER & HUDSON (1804), 1 Bos. & P. N. R. 96; Russ. & Ry. 72; 2 Leach, 978; 127 E. R. 395, C. C. R.

445. ———.]—Giving a forged note to an innocent agent, or an accomplice, that he may pass it, is a disposing of, & putting it away by prisoner, although not present at the time of the actual passing.

PART I. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.

438 i. When agent is innocent—Larceny.]—Prisoner having been indicted for stealing a cow it appeared that he sold her while in the public pound to A., & gave him a receipt for the purchase-money to show the pound-keeper. A. thereupon in pursuance of such sale took the animal away:—Held: the taking by A. was in effect the taking by the prisoner.—R. v. RYAN (1868), 8 N. S. W. S. C. R. 22.—AUS.

If the agent knew when he offered the note to a third person that it was a forged note, prisoner can not be considered as principal, but if the agent was employed by prisoner as an innocent instrument, being ignorant that the note was a forged one, it will then be the act of prisoner, & he may properly be convicted (VAUGHAN, B.).—GILES'S CASE (1827), 1 Mood. C. C. 166, C. C. R.

See Forgery Act, 1913 (c. 27).

446. — Obtaining by false pretences.]—Deft., knowing that certain moneys were due to B., fraudulently induced a boy, by the promise of a penny, to fetch it, saying, "Go to the payable & fetch B.'s money." The boy innocently went, & having asked for B.'s payable money, obtained it, & afterwards handed it over to deft. The person paying the money would not have parted with it if the boy had not said he was sent for it, & if he had not believed that the boy was authorised by B. to receive it:—Held: (1) deft. was indictable for obtaining the money by the false pretence that the boy was authorised to receive it; (2) the conviction would be quashed upon the ground that such pretence was not alleged in the indictment.

A person putting in motion an innocent agent is responsible for his representations (COCKBURN, C.J.).—R. v. BUTCHER (1858), Bell, C. C. 6; 28 L. J. M. C. 14; 32 L. T. O. S. 110; 22 J. P. 739; 4 Jur. N. S. 1155; 7 W. R. 38; 8 Cox, C. C. 77, C. C. R.

447. — Falsification of accounts.]—B., a collector in the employment of N., collected on Feb. 22 from S. £8 14s. 10d. due to N. The ordinary course of business was for B., at the end of each day, to account to E., N.'s cash clerk, for money collected during the day, E.'s duty being to enter payments accounted for by B. in the cash book. On the evening of Feb. 22, B. gave E. a slip of paper on which he had written "S. on account £5," which E. copied into the cash book, believing it represented the whole amount collected by B. from S.:—Held: B. was rightly convicted under Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (c. 24), s. 1.—R. v. BUTT (1884), 51 L. T. 607; 49 J. P. 233; 1 T. L. R. 103; 15 Cox, C. C. 564, C. C. R.

Annotation:—Consd. R. v. Olphant, [1905] 2 K. B. 67.

448. — Inciting to arson.]—C. incited H., a girl of fourteen of sufficient understanding for her years, to set fire to a dwelling-house, which C., on behalf of his son, the owner, had let to S. C. was entitled to dower out of the house but no dower was assigned. H. was indicted for maliciously setting fire to a dwelling-house in the possession of S., & C. as an accessory before the fact:—Held: (1) C. had no such interest in the house as would have cleared her of the felony; (2) if she had had such an interest, H., who acted by her directions, could not have been guilty of felony.

(3) Semble: if C. had employed a child not at years of discretion so that the child was necessarily innocent C. must have been indicted as the principal.—HARRIS'S CASE (1753), Fost. 113.

449. — Murder by poisoning.]—A woman after she had two daughters by her husband, eloped from him & lived with another man; & afterwards one of her daughters came to her, & she asked her how her father was, to which her daughter answered that he had a cold. The wife replied, "Here is a good powder for him, give it him in his posset," & on this the daughter carried home the powder, & told all this that her mother had said to her to her other sister, who in her absence gave the powder to her father in his posset, of which he died:—Held: the wife was principal in the murder, & also the man with whom she ran away, he being proved to be advising in the poison; but the two daughters were in no fault, they both being ignorant of the poison.—ANON. (circa 1634), Kel. 53; 84 E. R. 1079.

450. — Poison administered by unauthorised agent.]—Prisoner was indicted for the murder of her infant child by poison. It appeared that she purchased a bottle of laudanum, & directed the person who had the care of the child to give it a teaspoonful every night. That person did not do so, but put the bottle on the mantelpiece, where another little child found it, & gave part of the contents to prisoner's child, who, soon after, died:—Held: the administering of the laudanum by the child was, under all the circumstances of the case, as much, in point of law, an administering by prisoner as if she had herself actually administered it with her own hand.—R. v. MICHAEL (1840), 9 C. & P. 356; 2 Mood. C. C. 120, C. C. R.

451. — Poison administered to unintended person.]—(1) If A. intending to kill his wife gives her a poisoned apple, & she, being ignorant of it, gives it to a child against whom A. never meant any harm, & against his will & persuasion, & the child eats it & dies, this is murder in A. & a poisoning by him, but the wife, because ignorant, is not guilty.

(2) If A. persuades B. to poison C., & B. accordingly gives poison to C. who eats part of it, & gives the rest to D. who is killed by it, A. is not accessory to the murder of D. because it was not the direct & immediate effect of the act done in pursuance of A.'s command, but happened accidentally through the act of C. to which A. was no way privy, & his command shall not be carried over to any other than to the person intended by him.—R. v. SAUNDERS & ARCHER (1575), 2 Plowd. 473; Fost. 371; 75 E. R. 706.

452. When agent acts for the purpose of detection of principal—Making die—For counterfeit money.]—A. was indicted as a principal for feloniously making a die which would impress the resemblance of the obverse side of a shilling. A. had gone to a die-sinker & ordered four dies of the size of a shilling to be made, stating them to be for two whist clubs. One die was to be exactly like

g. — Posting obscene letters.]—By Act No. 1128 (Post Office Act), s. 118, it is provided that "If any person knowingly puts into any post office in V. any letter packet parcel or newspaper bearing any indecent obscene profane or libellous address signature marks words or designs or containing any indecent or obscene print photograph lithograph writing engraving book or card or other indecent or obscene article he shall be liable to a penalty not less than five nor exceeding fifty pounds":—Held: a person may be convicted under this sect. for causing another person to put an indecent letter into the post office.—LOMAX v. WILSON (1893), 19 V. L. R. 404.—AUS.

r. — Gambling transactions in stocks.]—A broker who merely acts as such for two parties, one a buyer & the other a seller, without having any pecuniary interest in the transaction beyond his fixed commission, & without any guilty knowledge on his part of the intention of the contracting parties to gamble in stocks or merchandise, is not liable to prosecution under the criminal code of Canada, s. 201 (a) & (b), nor as accessory under sect. 61.—R. v. DOWN (1899), Q. R. 17 S. C. 67.—CAN.

s. Instigation of principal.]—Applt. was tried for murder & found guilty. The victim had been killed by applt.'s son at the instigation of his father. The son, having had his trial previously, had been found guilty of manslaughter:—Held: applt. could be convicted of murder.—MILLARD v. R., [1921] 62 S. C. R. 21; 59 D. L. R. 34.—CAN.

Before making them, the die-sinker communicated with the officers of the Mint, who directed him to execute prisoner's order, which he did, & from these counterfeit shillings could be coined:—Held: A. was rightly indicted for the felony as a principal.—*R. v. 454. When agent is insane—Murder—Act done at instigation of procurer of act.]—If A. puts a sword into the hand of a madman & bids him kill B. with it, & then A. goeth away, & the madman kills B. with the sword as A. commanded him, this is murder in A. though absent, & he is principal.—ANON. 455. ————]*—Act done with concurrence of principal.]—A. count in an indictment charged A. with the murder of B., & also charged C. & D. with being present, aiding & abetting A. in the commission of the murder. It appeared that A. was an insane person:—Held: (1) C. & D. could not be convicted on this count.

A., who was insane, collected a number of persons together who armed themselves, having a common purpose of resisting the lawfully constituted authorities, A. having declared that he would cut down any constables who came against him. A., in the presence of C. & D., two of the persons of his party, afterwards shot an assistant of a constable who came to apprehend A. under a warrant:—Held: C. & D. were guilty of murder as principals in the first degree, & any apprehension that C. & D. had of personal danger to themselves from A. was no ground of defence for continuing with him after he had so declared his purpose; (3) it was no ground of defence, that A. & his party had no distinct or particular object in view when they assembled together & armed themselves.

The jury convicted both, but said, that they were not satisfied as to which fired:—Held: (1) the jury were not bound to find prisoners guilty of one or other of the counts only; (2) notwithstanding the word "afterwards" in the second count both the counts related substantially to the same person killed & to one killing, & might have been transposed without any alteration of time or meaning.—*R. v. One of two men being struck by a third, the other incited him to strike in return; & after the lapse of several minutes, the assailant having gone away, both pursued him with that purpose, & it appeared that, without any previous fighting, he was knocked down, & that then one or other of them, it could not be proved which, kicked him in the eye with a heavy iron shod boot, causing his death:—Held: neither of them was guilty of murder, there being no evidence of a common design to kill, or to inflict murderous or felonious violence, but both were guilty of manslaughter.—*R. v. The jury were charged, (1) if they were satisfied that the violence had been the criminal act of one of the prisoners, that was not sufficient to enable them to bring in a verdict of guilty against both, unless they found more evidence of concurrence on the part of the other spouse than mere presence or subsequent silence; (2) if there were no such evidence of concurrence, & there was no satisfactory evidence to prove which of the panels inflicted the violence, then the jury must find the charge not proven against either.—H.M. ADVOCATE v. BARBIER CAMPBELL & DUNN (1907), 5 Irv. 482; 40 Sc. Jur.

t. ————Unlawful wounding.]—Two persons were indicted for assaulting & putting the prosecutor in bodily fear, & stealing money from his person, & immediately afterwards feloniously wounding him:—Held: there being deadly at a mile, for the purpose of practising firing with it. B. placed a board, which was handed to him by A., in the presence of C., in a tree in the field as a target. All three fired shots directed at the board so placed, from a distance of about 100 yds. No precautions of any kind were taken to prevent danger from such firing. One of the shots thus fired by one, though it was not proved by which one of them, killed a boy in a tree in a garden near the field, at a spot distant 393 yds. from the firing point. A., B. & C., were all found guilty by a jury of manslaughter:—Held: A., B. & C., had been guilty of a breach of duty in firing at the spot in question, without taking proper precautions to prevent injury to others, & were rightly convicted of manslaughter.—*R. v. 460. — Robbery with violence.—On an indictment for wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm, it appeared that two persons, one of whom was prisoner, attacked & wounded prosecutor, & robbed him; it was not proved which of the two persons inflicted the wound:—Held: (1) if prisoner inflicted the wound on prosecutor with intent to rob him, he having at the same time an intent to do him grievous bodily harm to effectuate his intention of robbing, he ought to be convicted on this indictment; (2) even if prisoner's was not the hand that inflicted the wound, he ought to be convicted on this indictment, if the jury were satisfied that the two persons were engaged in the common purpose of robbing prosecutor, & that the other person's was the hand which inflicted the wound.—*R. v. There was evidence that applt. was with others with the joint & common purpose of killing game, & that game was killed, & that being so, he is liable (ERLE, C.J.).—MAYHEW v. WARDLEY (1863),

463. Uttering forged order—Absence of confederate at time of uttering.—If several plan the uttering of a forged order for payment of money, & it is uttered accordingly by one in the absence of the others, the actual utterer is alone the principal.—BADCOCK & BRADY'S CASE (1813), Russ. & Ry. 249, C. 464. Admission of thief to house by servant—Absence of servant at time of theft.—A servant let a person into his master's house on a Saturday afternoon, & concealed him there all night, in order that he might rob the house; & on the Sunday morning left the premises in pursuance of the previous arrangement. The man in the servant's absence broke into the bedroom of the —Supplying food.—The supplying of food to a person about to commit a crime is not necessarily an abetment of the crime; but if food were supplied in order that the criminal might go on a journey to the intended scene of the crime, or conceal himself while waiting for an opportunity to commit the crime, the supplying of food would be in order to facilitate the commission of the crime & might facilitate it.—Re LINGAM RAMANNA (1880), 1 L. R. 2 Mad. 137.—IND.

f. — Forgery.—To prepare, in conjunction with others, a copy of an intended false document, & to buy a stamped paper for the purpose of writing such false document, & to ask for information as to a fact to be inserted in such false document, do not constitute forgery nor an attempt to commit forgery under the Penal Code, but are facts which would support a conviction for abetment of forgery as being acts done to facilitate the commission of the offence.—R. v. PADALA VENKATASAMI (1881), 1 L. R. 3 Mad. 4.—IND.

g. Attempt to steal—Absent at time of attempt.—Prisoner was convicted of unlawfully attempting to steal the goods of one G. It appeared when the first violence is committed & where one is seized, the others come to his assistance, & all are apprehended together. Where all persons are similarly armed & it is not proved by whose hand the most severe injury was inflicted, three cannot be acquitted because another & different injury is done by the fourth. This is an assault, committed in prosecution of an unlawful purpose in which all were engaged & therefore all are guilty, though it is for jury to say if they are so in equal degree.—*H.M. master & stole the contents of his cash-box:—Held: the man who took the property from the cash-box was rightly charged as a thief, & the servant who let him into the house as an accessory before the fact.—R. v. TUCKWELL (1841), Car. & M. 215.

465. ———.]—If A. unlocks a door of a room of which he has the key, in order to allow B. to commit a larceny in it, & A. then goes away, & B. in his absence, enters the room & removes articles out of it, A. is not a principal in the larceny.—R. v. JEFFRIES & BRYANT (1848), 3 Cox, C. C. 85.

466. ———.]—A policy of insurance upon goods in business premises against loss by theft or burglary contained a proviso excepting loss by theft by members of the assured's business staff. A porter on the business staff of the assured, in pursuance of a preconceived scheme, admitted a member of a gang of thieves into the premises to enable him to commit a theft therein. The theft was committed in the porter's absence:—Held: the case fell within the proviso & the underwriters were not liable because the porter was a principal in the second degree.—SAQUI & LAWRENCE v. STEARNS, [1911] 1 K. B. 426; 80 L. J. K. B. 451; 103 L. T. 583; 27 T. L. R. 105; 55 Sol. Jo. 91; 16 Com. Cas. 32, C. A.

467. Murder—Result of common design—Some confederates at a distance.—All those who assemble themselves together with intent to commit even a trespass, the execution whereof causes a felony to be committed, & continue together abetting one another till they have actually put their design into execution & also those who are present when a felony is committed, & abet the doing of it, are principals in the felony.

Where persons combine to stand by one another in a breach of the peace, with a general resolution to resist all opposers, & in the execution of their design a murder is committed, all of the company are equally principals in the murder, though at the time of the fact some of them were at such a distance as to be out of view.

A. & others were indicted for feloniously demolishing the house of B. It was proved that A. & a mob of persons assembled at H. A. there addressed the mob in violent language & led them in a direction towards a police office about a mile from H., some of the mob from time to time leaving & others joining. At the police office, the mob broke the windows & then went & attacked the house of B. & set it on fire, A. not being present at the attack on the house or at the fire:—Held: A. ought not to be convicted of the demolition, as it did not sufficiently appear what the original design of the mob at H. was, nor whether any of the mob who were at H. were the persons who demolished B.'s house.

If rioters attack a house & have begun to demolish it, but leave of their own accord after having gone a certain length, & before the act of demolition is completed, this is evidence from which a jury might infer that they did not intend to demolish the house; but if the mob were prevented from going on by the interference of the police or any other force, that would be evidence to show that they were compelled to desist from that which they had designed, & it would be for the jury to infer that they had begun to demolish within 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 8.

Destroying moveable shop shutters is not a beginning to demolish within the statute, as they are not part of the freehold.

If rioters destroy a house by fire, that is as much a demolition within 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 8, as if any other mode of destruction were used.

If a part of the object of rioters be to demolish a house, it makes no difference that they also acted with another object, such as to injure a person who had taken refuge there.—R. v. HOWELL (1839), 9 C. & P. 437; 3 State Tr. N. S. 1087.

ii. Assistance after Act.

468. Larceny—Assisting to remove property—Continuing transaction.—D. was indicted for stealing barilla which was on board a Swedish ship at P. consigned to H. D. had been employed by H. to bring the barilla on shore. The evidence was that while the barilla was in D.'s boat, some of his servants without his privity severed a portion & concealed it in another part of the boat under some rope. D., however, subsequently assisted in removing this portion from the boat for the purpose of carrying it off. It was objected that, in the circumstances, D. was not a principal but a receiver or accessory after the fact:—Held: it was one continuing transaction to the time of the complete carrying off from the boat, & D. was guilty as principal.—R. v. DYER & DISTING (1801), 2 East, P. C. 767.

469. ———.]—Some barilla was in H.'s warehouse. While it was there, several persons employed as labourers or servants by him entered into a conspiracy to steal some of it; & accordingly some of them who had access to the warehouse removed a parcel of it nearer to the door than it was before, in the course of the morning, & about nine at night these persons together with A. & D., who had in the meantime agreed to purchase it of the others, came to the warehouse yard, & assisted the others, who took it out of the warehouse, in carrying it away from thence. They being all indicted as principals in the felony, the objection was made that these two were only receivers or accessories after the fact, the felony being complete before their participation in the transaction:—Held: it was a continuing transaction as to those who joined in the plot before the goods were finally carried away from the premises, & all defts. having concurred in or been present at the act of removing them from the warehouse wherein they were lawfully deposited, were principals.—R. v. ATTWELL & O'DONNELL (1801), 2 East, P. C. 768.

On leaving the place he took some silver from his pocket & was counting it when he was arrested. On entering the bar signs of recognition took place between S. & C., & C. was present when S. took the

T., & made the attempt, but were disturbed after one had got into the store through a panel taken out by them. Prisoner saw them off from T., but did not go himself:—Held: as those actually engaged were guilty of the attempt to steal, the prisoner, under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 19, s. 9, was properly convicted.—R. v. EDMONDE (1866), 26 U. C. R. 152.—CAN.

money from the till. The jury convicted S. of stealing & C. of receiving:—Held: this was evidence which the judge ought to have left to the jury as reasonable evidence upon which C. might have been convicted as a principal in the second degree; & therefore the conviction of C. for receiving could not be sustained.—*R. v. They took no part in the management of the fight, & they neither said nor did anything:—Held: the combatants at a prize fight, & all persons aiding & abetting therein, are guilty of an assault, for which an indictment will lie.

Semle: mere presence of a person, unexplained, at a prize fight affords some evidence for the consideration of a jury of an aiding or abetting in such fight.

It is a general rule in the case of principals in the second degree that there must be participation in the act, & that, although a man is present whilst a felony is being committed, if he takes no part in it, & does not act in concert with those who commit it, he will not be a principal in the second degree merely because he does not endeavour to prevent the felony, or apprehend the felon. If two coaches run against each other, & the drivers of both are to blame, neither of them has any remedy against the other for damages. But in the case of loss of life the law takes a different view & the converse of that proposition is true, for there each party is responsible for any blame that may ensue, however large the share may be, & so highly does the law value human life that it admits of no justification wherever life has been lost, & the carelessness or negligence of any one person has contributed to the death of another person. The jury did not agree as to whether the prisoner actually fired the shot which killed the constable, but found the prisoner guilty on what their foreman called the second "count," & their verdict was recorded with their consent as one of "guilty," with a clause added as to their inability to agree as to whether the prisoner fired the shot:—Held: having regard to the evidence

Manslaughter of keeper.]—More than nine men, of whom seven were armed with guns, being out at night in pursuit of game, were met by a party of gamekeepers, without firearms, who at once assaulted them with sticks, & one of them with a dangerous weapon, likely to inflict deadly injury, with which he struck one of the poachers, upon which another of them fired & killed him. The grand jury were directed to throw out bills for murder against two of the men, one of whom was supposed to have fired the fatal shot, & the whole nine were indicted for manslaughter. There was evidence that they all stood in a row & cried "shoot":—Held: (1) whether or not the man who fired the shot could be identified, none of the prisoners would be guilty, unless parties to the act of firing, & though their being in a row, & crying out "shoot" was evidence that they were parties to the act, it was only evidence, & its effect would depend upon how far all the circumstances showed that the firing was in pursuance of a common design to shoot, or only in consequence of a particular personal encounter; (2) an approver having given evidence that one of the prisoners fired the shot, a policeman might be asked whether another of them, who had given information, had not stated that it was a different man who fired.—*R. v. The jury found both prisoners guilty of shooting with intent to murder, but they added that they were unable to say which of them fired the shot, but that the intention was to prevent arrest at all costs, even to the extent of murder, & that they were acting with that common purpose:—Held: the jury were justified in inferring the common purpose from prisoners' actions & conduct when they became aware of the pursuit of the keepers.—*R. v. Seditious libel—Sale of pamphlet.—A. was indicted for publishing a libel in the form of a pamphlet, attempting to justify the crimes of assassination & murder, & to incite persons to commit those crimes upon the sovereigns & rulers of Europe. There were also counts, under Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 4, charging him with encouraging & endeavouring to persuade persons unknown to murder the sovereigns & rulers of Europe. B. was charged with aiding & abetting H. to commit these misdemeanours:—Held: the words "sovereigns of Europe" specified a definite class, & the counts were good.

The jury were directed that if they found A. guilty, then B., who had sold copies of the pamphlet, was guilty of aiding & abetting if he knew what was in the pamphlet, or deliberately shut his eyes to what was in it.

Deft. was tried on an indictment charging him with causing & procuring obscene books & photographs to be sold & published, & to be sent by post contrary to Post Office (Protection) Act, 1884 (c. 76), s. 4, & was convicted:—Held: the conviction was right. *v. The veterinary surgeon was summoned, under Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849 (c. 92), s. 2, for cruelly ill-treating the horse "by causing it to be worked while in an unfit state." 610. Dangerous driving of motor car—Approval of owner—Liability of owner.—A person who has aided & abetted the commission of an offence punishable on summary conviction may, under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), s. 5, be convicted upon an information which charges him with having committed the offence as principal offender. Applt. appealed to quarter sessions against a conviction for unlawfully driving his motor car at a speed dangerous to the public. At the hearing of the appeal there was a conflict of evidence as to whether the car was being driven by applt. or by a lady seated by his side in the car. Quarter sessions, without deciding whether applt. was himself driving the car, dismissed the appeal finding as facts that if the lady was driving she was doing so with the consent & approval of applt., who must have known that the speed was dangerous, & who, being in control of the car, could, & ought to, have prevented it. On appeal:—Held: there was evidence on which applt. could be convicted of aiding & abetting the commission of the offence.—DU CROS v. LAMBOURNE, [1907] 1 K. B. 40; 76 L. J. K. B. 50; 95 L. 1. Attempt to rape.—B. & G. were charged on an information of one count with committing a rape on F. The evidence showed that F. in the night heard a noise downstairs & going down in her nightdress found G. under a table, G. producing a pistol & using threats carried F. upstairs. He threw her down on her bed & tied her hands & feet to the head & foot of her bed. He then left her. He came again to her twice, once naked, but did not then assault her. He then dressed himself. After this B. appeared. B. had known F. before. As she lay tied he conversed with her & attempted to have connection with her but desisted saying, "I can't." G. then returned & after conversation with B. was then overheard by F. to say to B., "You coward! if you don't I will." B. left the room & was heard by F. to go downstairs & jump out of the kitchen window. G. then undressed & with violence assaulted F. with intent. The jury acquitted both of rape but found both 613. Sale of liquor without a licence—Supply of liquor to vendors by brewer—Knowledge by brewer of resale.—Applt., a brewer, was in the habit of supplying three of his private customers, small cottagers, with beer for their own consumption. Shortly after war broke out between Great Britain & Germany, the supply by applt. of beer to the cottagers increased considerably. Applt. was told by his carman that these customers were selling beer to soldiers, when he said that they must not do it, but that there was nothing to prevent the soldiers giving the cottagers something for their trouble in obtaining the beer. This remark was communicated by the carman to the cottagers, & the increased supply of beer continued. The cottagers were charged with, & pleaded guilty to, selling intoxicating liquors without a licence to the soldiers, & applt. was charged with, & convicted of, aiding & abetting them:—Held: there was evidence before the justices which would support such conviction.—COOK v. #### SUB-SECT. 6.—ATTEMPT TO COMMIT CRIME.

A. In General.

740. Definition.—The fact that a final step still remains to be taken to consummate an attempt to obtain by false pretences does not prevent the acts done amounting to such an attempt, if those acts would have culminated in the full offence if accused had not been interrupted.

The Draft Criminal Code definition is "An attempt to commit an offence is an act done or omitted with intent to commit that offence, forming part of a series of acts or omissions which would have constituted the offence if such series of acts or omissions had not been interrupted, either by the voluntary determination of the offender not to complete the offence or by some other cause" (PICKFORD, J.).—R. v. LAITWOOD (1910), 4 Cr. App. Rep. 248, C. C. A.

(2) It makes a great difference whether an act was done & where no act at all is done. The intent may make an act, innocent in itself, criminal; nor is the completion of an act, criminal in itself, necessary to constitute criminality (per Cur.).

(3) The next question is whether an act done in pursuance of an intent to commit an act which, if completed, would be a misdemeanour only, can itself be a misdemeanour. It was objected that an attempt to commit a misdemeanour was no offence; but no authority for this is cited, & there are many on the other side (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).

750. Mere intention not enough.]—An indictment charged deft., who had contracted with the guardians to deliver to the poor loaves of a certain weight, with attempting to obtain money from the guardians by falsely pretending to the relieving officer that he had delivered to certain poor persons certain loaves, & that each loaf was of a certain weight. The evidence was that he had contracted to deliver loaves of the specified weight to any poor persons bringing a ticket from

k. *Misdemeanour at common law.—Incitement of one to incite a third party to commit a crime.—Not an attempt.]—*Deft. charged with offering money to a person to swear that A., B., or C. gave a certain sum of money to vote for a candidate at an election:—Held: the offence was not an attempt to commit the crime of subornation of perjury, but something less, being an incitement to give false evidence or particular evidence regardless of its truth or falsehood, & was a misdemeanour at common law.—It. v. Cole (1902), 22 C. L. T. 132; 3 O. L. R. 389; 1 O. W. R. 117.—CAN.

l. *Explaining to another how a crime may be committed.—Subsequent attempt in consequence.]—*Where one person writes a letter to another explaining how a crime of a peculiar nature may be committed, & the other person subsequently attempts to commit a crime of that nature, the writer of the letter is guilty of an attempt to commit that crime equally with the person who actually made the attempt, even though when the letter was written no specific crime of that nature was in contemplation of either of the parties. Prisoner, evidently in answer to an inquiry, wrote a letter to S. instructing him as to the method of opening safes with explosives. Two days later S. & W. broke into certain premises containing a locked safe, with explosives in their possession ready for use, but, imagining they were observed, before commencing to use the explosives they got frightened & decamped. They were captured, tried, & convicted of breaking into the premises with intent to commit a crime. The letter having been found on S., the prisoner was then put on his trial upon an indictment containing eight counts, one of them charging with an attempt to steal the contents of the safe on these premises, & one charging him with breaking & entering with intent to commit a crime. The jury found as a fact that when the letter was written the particular crime committed by S. & W. was not in contemplation, but that some crime of the nature was in contemplation. The prisoner was convicted:—Held: he was properly convicted under the count charging him with breaking & entering the premises with intent to steal, for, having counselled S. to commit that offence, & knowing that it would be likely to be committed in consequence, he was a party to the offence.—R. v. BAKER (1909), 28 N. Z. L. R. 536.—N.Z.

m. *Inciting another to commit a crime.—Not an attempt.]—*To incite another to commit a crime, where that other does nothing in furtherance of the crime, does not constitute an attempt to commit the crime. An accused was convicted of attempting to administer poison with intent to commit murder. Accused had given N. some arsenite of soda, which he knew to be a poison, with instructions to put some into the food of V. N. took the poison to V., & together they delivered it to the police:—Held: accused should not have been convicted of an attempt to administer poison.—R. v. NIHOVO, [1921] App. D. 485.—S. AF.

n. *Attempt to murder.]—*Where two persons fire at one another & one is actually hit & killed, the other is not guilty of murder, but of attempt to murder, which offences do not constitute the same "act."—R. v. NIRMAL KANTA ROY (1914), 1 L. R. 41 Cal. 1072.—IND.

PART I. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 6.—B. (a).

750 i. Mere intention not enough.]—Prisoner drew a loaded revolver from his pocket with intent to shoot the prosecutor, but before he could do anything to discharge the same he was overpowered:—Held: there was no evidence to convict the prisoner. The mere drawing from his pocket a loaded revolver was not an attempt to discharge it at another person.—R. v.

the relieving officer, & that the duty of debt. was to return these tickets at the end of each week, together with a written statement of the number of loaves delivered by him to the paupers, whereupon he would be credited for that amount in the relieving officer's book, & the money would be paid at the time stipulated in the contract, namely, at the end of two months from a day named. Debt. having delivered loaves of less than the specific weight, returned the tickets, & obtained credit in account for the loaves so delivered; but before the time for payment of the money arrived the fraud was discovered.

The mere intention to commit a misdemeanour is not criminal. Some act is required, & we do not think that all acts towards committing a misdemeanour are indictable. Acts remotely leading towards the commission of the offence are not to be considered as attempts to commit it, but acts immediately connected with it are; & if, in this case, after the credit with the relieving officer for the fraudulent overcharge, any further step on the part of debt. had been necessary to obtain payment, as the making out of a further account or producing the vouchers to the board, we should have thought that the obtaining credit in account with the relieving officer would not have been sufficiently proximate to the obtaining the money. But, on the statement in this case, no other act on the part of debt. would have been required. It was the last act, depending on himself, towards the payment of the money, & therefore it ought to be considered as an attempt (PARKE, B.).—R. v. EAGLETON (1855), Dears. C. C. 376, 515; 24 L. J. M. C. 158; 26 L. T. O. S. 7; 19 J. P. 546; 1 Jur. N. S. 940; 4 W. R. 17; 3 C. L. R. 1145; 6 Cox, C. C. 559, C. C. R.

753 ii. —[.]—Held: by Glover, J., incendiarism having, on several occasions occurred in a village, produced by a ball of rag, with a piece of burning charcoal within it, & the prisoner one evening being discovered to have a ball of that description concealed in his dhoti, which contained burning charcoal, he is guilty of an attempt to commit mischief by fire. The possession of the instrument to commit mischief by fire, & the going about of the person with it, are sufficient to raise a presumption that he intended to commit the act, & had already begun to move towards the execution. These facts are sufficient to constitute an attempt:—Held: that the possession of a fire-ball & moving about, it cannot support a conviction under Penal Code, ss. 436 & 511. These facts are not sufficiently indicative of an intention to destroy a building used for human dwelling. To constitute an offence, it is not only necessary that the prisoner should have done an overt act towards commission of the offence, but that the act itself should have been done in the attempt to commit it.—R. v. DAYAL BAWRI (1869), 3 B. L. R. A. C. 55.—IND.

The evidence was that the two prisoners, with another boy, were seen by a policeman to sit together on some doorsteps near a crowd, & when a well-dressed person came up to see what was going on, one of the prisoners made a sign to the others, & two of them got up & followed the person into the crowd. One of them was seen to lift the tail of the coat of a man, as if to ascertain if there was anything in the pocket, but making no visible attempt to pick the pocket, & to place a hand against the dress of a woman, but no actual attempt to insert the hand into the pocket was observed. Then they returned to the doorstep & resumed their seats. They repeated this two or three times. There was no proof of any preconcert other than this proceeding:—Held: (1) this was not sufficient evidence of a conspiracy; (2) it was not evidence of an attempt to steal.—*R. v. Evidence was given at the trial that during an interview between prisoner & prosecutor, prisoner drew a loaded revolver from his coat pocket. Prosecutor immediately seized prisoner & prevented him from raising his arm, a struggle ensued, in the course of which prisoner nearly succeeded in getting his arm free, but after a few minutes prosecutor wrested the revolver from him & he was taken into custody. During the struggle prisoner several times said to prosecutor, "You've got to die":—Held: there was evidence upon which prisoner could properly be convicted of an attempt to discharge the revolver within the meaning of sect. 18 of above Act.

If there had only been evidence of intention to shoot, or of preparation to shoot, the conviction could not be maintained. But there was evidence of an attempt to discharge, of acts "forming part of a series of acts" (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).—R. v. LINNEKER, [1906] 2 K. B. 99; 75 L. J. K. B.

A jeweller, who had insured his stock in trade against burglary, with the object of obtaining the policy money from the insurers, falsely represented to the police that a burglary had been committed on his premises & the jewellery stolen, in the hope that the police would make a report by which the insurers might be induced to pay; but before he had made any communication about the pretended burglary to the insurers the fraud was discovered & he was arrested:—Held: on those facts he could not be convicted of an attempt to obtain money from the insurers by false pretences.—*R. v. The applying a lighted match to a loaded match-lock gun, or the striking

(an American subject) of P. Co., Ltd., is at present in Sydney, & on his arrival here found that 215 bags of cocoa which he had consigned to D. (a German subject who carried on business at Hamburg) had not left Sydney. It is, of course, impossible to get this cargo away to Germany, & M. has therefore consigned this parcel to K. & Co., San Francisco. We thought that if there was a good opening for a first-class cocoa in New York you might possibly assist in the disposal of same, & it may be advisable for you to get into touch with K. & Co. for the purpose of getting samples of this & following lots. M. does not know how to communicate with B. of the disposal of the cocoa, think it better to advise you, and know the safest way of to the proceeds which are due for his account & will be held by K. & Co. pending instructions from B." The evidence bore out the statements in this letter. B. also assisted M. to obtain shipment of the

But the woman who takes the thing, in the belief that it is capable of procuring abortion, though in fact it is not capable of so doing, is guilty of the attempt to commit the crime. Semble: if the person who incites the woman to take the thing believes the thing to be noxious or capable of procuring abortion, he is guilty of inciting her to attempt to commit the crime, although, owing to facts being otherwise than he believed, the commission of the crime in the manner proposed was impossible.—*R. v. 782. Misdemeanour at common law—Mere incitement sufficient—Offence not committed.]—To solicit a servant to steal his master's goods is a misdemeanour, though it be not charged in the indictment that the servant stole the goods, nor that any other act was done except the soliciting & inciting, & such offence is indictable at the sessions, having a tendency to a breach of the peace.—*R. v. 783. — — — — — Submission to incitement for purpose of betrayal of inciter.]—To incite a servant to rob his master is a misdemeanour at common law, & an incitement to steal any silk that may be in the servant's care without further charge of attempting to administer a drug or other noxious thing with intent to procure a miscarriage, the record discloses sufficient evidence to justify the inference that the accused attempted to obtain noxious substances from a physician, that he believed that he had got them & that he tried to get the woman to take them, the conviction should be sustained, although the charge to the jury, apparently overlooking the fact that the charge against the accused was one of an attempt only, submitted to it the question whether the substances were in fact drugs or other noxious things, & there was not sufficient evidence to support a reasonable inference to that effect.—*R. v. Where prisoner presented an uncapped gun at F., believing the gun to be capped, with the intention of murdering him, but was prevented from pulling the trigger:—Held: that he could not be convicted of an attempt to murder upon a charge framed under above sect., but that in the same circumstances he might be convicted upon a charge of simple attempt to murder framed under s. 511 in connection with ss. 299 & 300.—*R. v. The evidence was, that H. was a boy at school, & that he had received two other letters from prisoner, which he read, but that when he received the one mentioned in the above count he did not read it, nor was he in any way aware of its contents, but handed it over to the school authorities :—Held: (1) the count charged an indictable misdemeanour; (2) the sending the letter proved the attempt to incite, although it might be doubtful whether it could be said to amount to inciting or soliciting, inasmuch as H. was not aware of its contents.—*R. v. The above-mentioned counts were all framed under sect. 4 of above Act. Deft. was also charged with the common law offence of attempting to commit the above misdemeanours. The case for the prosecution was based upon two letters alleged to have been sent on July 28, & on Aug. 6, by deft. to B. The evidence for the prosecution did not prove that either of these letters had ever reached B.:—Held: to constitute the misdemeanour under sect. 4 of the above Act of soliciting, encouraging, persuading or endeavouring to persuade, or proposing to any person to murder any other person, the prosecution must show that there was some communication between the accused, & the person solicited, etc., though it is not necessary to show that the mind of the person solicited was affected thereby.—*R. v. The jury were directed that if they thought that by the publication of the article M. did intend to, & did, encourage or endeavour to persuade any person to murder any other person, whether a subject of her Majesty or not, & whether within the Queen's dominions or not, & that such encouragement and endeavouring to persuade was the natural & reasonable effect of the article, they should find him guilty:—Held: such direction was correct, & the publication & circulation of a newspaper article might be an encouragement, or endeavour to persuade to murder, within sect. 4 of the Act, although not addressed to any person in particular.—*R. v. Agreement to do unlawful act or lawful act by unlawful means—General rule.]—An indictment alleged that S. sold B. a mare for £39, that, while the price was unpaid, B. & C. conspired by false & fraudulent representations made to S., that the mare was unsound, & that B. had sold her for £27, to induce S. to accept £27 instead of the agreed on price of £39, & thereby to defraud S. of £12:—Held: the indictment was good, & being supported by proof of the facts alleged, it warranted a conviction.

It is an indictable offence to conspire by unlawful means to accomplish a lawful object (ERLE, J.).—R. v. CARLISLE (1854), Dears. C. C. 337; 23 L. J. M. C. 109; 23 L. T. O. S. 84; 18 J. P. 280; 18 Jur. 386; 2 W. R. 412; 2 C. L. R. 478; 6 Cox, C. C. 366, C. C. R.

807. ———.]—(1) Defts. were indicted for a criminal conspiracy & found guilty on the first two counts of the indictment. The second count alleged that defts., who were directors, etc., of a new co., had conspired to deceive the members of the committee of the Stock Exchange, & to induce them, contrary to the intent of certain of their rules, to order a quotation of the shares of the co. in the official list of the Stock Exchange, & "thereby to persuade divers liege subjects, who should thereafter buy & sell the shares of the said co., to believe that the said co. was duly formed, & had complied with the said rules, so as to entitle the co. to have their shares quoted in the official list of the Stock Exchange." Defts. assigned error:—Held: the second count was good after verdict, & sufficiently alleged a criminal conspiracy, for it contained allegations, some accurately & some inaccurately stated, which, assuming them to have been found proved in a sense adverse to defts., showed that there was an agreement by them to cheat & defraud, by means of false pretences, those liege subjects who might buy shares in the co.

Every pleading, civil or criminal, must contain allegations of the existence of all the facts necessary to support the charge or defence set up by such pleading. An indictment must, therefore, contain an allegation of every fact necessary to constitute the criminal charge preferred by it. As in order to make acts criminal they must always be done with a criminal mind, the existence of that criminality of mind must always be alleged. If, in order to support the charge, it is necessary to show that certain acts have been committed, it is necessary to allege that those acts were in fact committed. If it is necessary to show that those acts, when they were committed, were done with a particular intent, it is necessary to aver that intention. If it is necessary in order to support the charge that the existence of a certain fact should be negatived, that negative must be alleged (BRETT, J.A.).

If the second count in this indictment contains averments sufficiently stated which are enough to show sufficiently that the defts. unlawfully, i.e. with minds intending to do wrong, agreed by false pretences to cheat & defraud those who might buy shares in the co., it sufficiently alleges a criminal conspiracy within the rule enunciated below; for if any person were cheated by false pretences into purchasing a commodity which but for such falsehood he would not have purchased, it is undoubted that he could maintain some suit for relief or remedy founded on the falsehood & fraud thus perpetrated on him (BRETT, J.A.).

(2) The crime of conspiracy is completely committed, if it is committed at all, the moment two or more have agreed that they will do, at once, or at some future time, certain things. It is not necessary in order to complete the offence that any one thing should be done beyond the agreement. The conspirators may repent & stop, or may have no opportunity, or may be prevented, or may fail. Nevertheless the crime is complete; it was completed when they agreed. It is not, of course, every agreement which is a criminal conspiracy. It is difficult perhaps, to enunciate an exhaustive or a complete definition; but agreements may be described which are undoubtedly criminal. An agreement to accomplish an end forbidden by law, though by means which would be harmless if used to accomplish an unforbidden end, is a criminal conspiracy. An agreement to accomplish, by means which are if done by themselves forbidden by law, an end which is harmless if accomplished by unforbidden means, is a criminal conspiracy. An agreement made with a fraudulent or wicked mind to do that which, if done, would give to prosecutor a right of suit founded on fraud, or on violence exercised on or towards him, is a criminal conspiracy (BRETT, J.A.).

(3) To support a charge of obtaining money, etc., by false pretences, it is necessary to show, & therefore, to allege, that prisoner, with a wicked or criminal mind, stated something which, if true, would be an existing fact; that he did so with intent to procure the possession of money, etc.; that he knew his statement was, that is to say, that so far as his mind was concerned he intended that his statement should be, false; that by the statement he did so act on the mind of prosecutor as that he did thereby obtain money, etc.; that the statement was in fact untrue, in the sense of being incorrect (BRETT, J.A.).—*R. v. PART I. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 8.—A.

p. General rule.]—Conspiracy consists in a combination & agreement by persons to do some illegal act or to effect a legal purpose by illegal means; & the conspiracy is complete if two or more than two should agree to do an illegal thing. Conspiracy is not a substantive offence in India, but is incorporated in the law of abetment of offences. In order to constitute the offence of abetment by conspiracy, there must be a combining together of two or more persons in the conspiracy, & an act or illegal omission must take place in pursuance of that conspiracy & in order to the doing of that thing.—

809. ——— Independent action insufficient.]—A widespread strike having taken place in the L. manufacturing districts, bands of strikers went about forcing the hands to turn out, & all the mills in M. were stopped. At numerous meetings held during the strike speakers urged the people to remain out, & similar advice was given by a conference which met at M. C., the leader, & 58 others were indicted subsequently for a seditious conspiracy & other misdemeanours. The jury found some of defts., including C., guilty on the fifth count, & others on the fourth count as well. Judgment was afterwards arrested on the fifth count, & defts. convicted on the fourth count were not called up for judgment:—Held: (1) a combination of two or more persons to do, or cause others to do, an illegal act, or to bring about a legal act by illegal means was a criminal conspiracy; (2) to find defts. guilty on any count, they must be found guilty of one & the same conspiracy; it was not enough that defts. should have done the same illegal acts, they must have been associated in a common object; (3) any one of several defts. who had been indicted for misdemeanour & put upon their trial together, was a competent witness against the rest, provided that, at any time before verdict, a nolle prosequi in regard to him had been entered, or a verdict of acquittal taken.

as an exception, but was not a ground for challenge as a personal disqualification.

(2) The statute directs a jurors' book to be made up in each year for use in the year following, & declares that such book shall be in use from Jan. 1, for & during one year. In Nov. 1865, at a sitting of a special commission, a panel was returned from the then existing jury book; the jurors were not then called, but the sitting was duly adjourned to Jan. 10 1866 at which time

(5) Treason Felony Act, 1848 (c. 12), declares it to be felony to compass, imagine, invent, devise, & intend to deprive & depose the Queen, etc.
In support of the charge of this offence under the Act, it is sufficient to allege as overt acts that defts. conspired, combined, confederated & agreed to commit the offence.

(6) Where there are several overt acts charged in a count, & a judgment is given on a general verdict of guilty on that count, such judgment will be sustained, though some of the matters alleged as overt acts may be improperly so alleged, provided that the count contains allegations of overt acts that are sufficient & are sufficiently alleged.

(7) The allegation, in one count, of several different overt acts of felony is not objectionable under Treason Felony Act, 1848 (c. 12).

(8) Semble: no objection to the caption of an indictment for an allegation that the grand jurors were "sworn & affirmed" can be sustained without showing that these who were sworn were persons who ought to have affirmed, or that those who were affirmed were persons who ought to have been sworn.

(9) A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means (WILLES, J.).

(10) In the view which the judges take that the overt acts objected to were all properly laid, it is unnecessary to express any opinion as to whether alleged overt acts may be separately demurred to, though we do not doubt that one good overt act would sustain the judgment, nor

Probably neither the form of the demurrer nor that of the joinder ought to affect the judgment of the ct., & a demurrer in abatement for matter in bar is to us a novelty. Pltf. in error, however, cannot complain of the course taken in allowing him to plead over, & it was substantially correct if regarded, in what perhaps is the proper view to take of it, as an amendment allowed to pltf. in error before final judgment, notwithstanding the failure of his demurrer; a course within the competence of the ct., though it seems it ought to have swept away the demurrer & the proceedings thereupon, & simply substituted the plea of not guilty (WILLES, J.).—*MULCAHY v. ### 815. Combination to make charge against person—Whether indictment & acquittal necessary.]—

(1) Where several combine to charge a man with robbery, & to cause him to be indicted, & in execution of their conspiracy, they cause him to be apprehended, & to be bound to appear at assizes, & then they prefer a bill of indictment for robbery against him, which indictment is ignored by the grand jury, the party so grieved may have an action against them.

(2) No writ of conspiracy lies, unless the party is indicted & lawfully acquitted; but a false conspiracy is punishable although nothing be put in execution.—POULTERERS' CASE (1610), 9 Co. Rep. 55 b; 77 E. R. 813; sub nom. STONE v. WALTER, Moore, K. B. 813.

I should be sorry to have it doubted whether persons agreeing to go & sport upon another's ground, in other words, to commit a civil trespass, should be thereby in peril of an indictment for an offence which would subject them to infamous punishment (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—*R. v. 820. Unlawful assembly—Persons present merely from curiosity—Not guilty of conspiring.]—(1) The overt acts of a conspiracy are no part of the offence itself, though it is desirable that they should be put into the indictment, in order to give the parties accused an opportunity of knowing the facts upon which the Crown seek to rely in order to prove the conspiracy; but they are no part of the offence. That offence consists in combining & acting together to do an illegal act (ALDERSON, B.).

(2) There are many people present at an unlawful assembly who, though it is very imprudent on their part to be present, ought not to be convicted of an offence. Many will attend there simply from curiosity (ALDERSON, B.).—R. v. RANKIN (1848), 7 State Tr. N. S. 711.

821. Where, therefore, the offence charged is that of conspiracy, by three persons, two of whom are members of the House of Lords, to deceive the House, & so to prevent the due course of justice, & injure, & prejudice a third person, by making statements in the House, which they knew to be false, the magistrate is right in refusing to take any proceedings, as members of either House of Parliament are not civilly or criminally liable for any statements made in the House, nor for a conspiracy to make such statements.—*Ex p. 822. Act amounting to civil wrong—Combination to do it criminal.]—(1) A fraudulent agreement by a member of a partnership with third persons, wrongfully to deprive his partner by false entries & by false documents of all interest in some of the partnership property on taking accounts for the division of the property on the dissolution of the partnership, is a conspiracy, although the offence was completed before the passing of Larceny Act, 1868 (c. 116), by which a partner can be criminally convicted for feloniously stealing partnership property.

(2) It is not necessary in order to constitute a conspiracy that the acts agreed to be done should be acts which if done would be criminal. It is enough if the acts agreed to be done, although not criminal, are wrongful, i.e. amount to a civil wrong (COCKBURN, C.J.).

The facts of this case thus fall within the rule that when two fraudulently combine, the agreement may be criminal, although if the agreement were carried out no crime would be committed,

The conspiracy in this country to commit the offence is criminal by our law. The offence of conspiracy would be committed by any persons conspiring together to commit an unlawful act to the prejudice or injury of others, if the conspiracy was in this country, although the overt acts were abroad (WILLES, J.).

Where, therefore, an indictment charged a conspiracy, by unlawfully molesting workmen, to force them to depart from their employment:—Held: after verdict, the indictment showed with sufficient certainty that the conspiracy was to violate the provisions of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, s. 3, & was an indictable conspiracy.

880. ———.]—An indictment does not lie for conspiring merely to exonerate one parish from the charge of a pauper, & to throw it on another, nor for conspiring to cause a male pauper to marry a female pauper, for that purpose, it not being stated that the conspiracy was to effect such marriage by force, threat, or fraud, or that it was so effected in pursuance of the conspiracy.

It is unnecessary to allege overt acts, if the indictment charge what is in itself an unlawful conspiracy; but if not, the indictment must show some illegal act done in pursuance of the conspiracy. Persuading a male pauper settled in one parish to marry a female pauper settled in & chargeable to another, is not such an overt act.—R. v. SEWARD (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 706; 3 Nev. & M. K. On an indictment against M. by selling a glandered horse as a sound the evidence was, that A. having previously d M. by selling him a kicking horse, defts. B., C., D., & E., obtained that horse from M. in exchange for a glandered horse, which he subsequently sold. A., accompanied by G., afterwards sold M. another horse, in which transaction the latter was again defrauded. Some evidence was given to show that A., was frequently in company with some of the other defts., that he was aware of a previous sale of a glandered horse by them, but there was no other evidence to connect him with its sale to M.:—Held: in the absence of any evidence clearly leading to the conclusion that A. was a party to that sale, there was no evidence of a conspiracy to go to the jury against him.—*R. v. Evidence, however, that at the time it was made, deft. knew it to be false, coupled with any circumstances showing that he had an object in view in making it, will be evidence to go to the jury in support of the charge.—*R. v. One was seen to lift the tail of the coat of a man, as if to ascertain if there was anything in the pocket, but making no visible attempt to pick the pocket, & to place a hand against the dress of a woman but no actual attempt to insert the hand into the pocket was observed. Then they returned to the doorstep & resumed their seats. They repeated this two or three times. There was no proof of any preconcert, other than this, not to be

935 ii. ———.]—L. C. & Co., a firm of contractors in Q., tendered to harbour comrs. for work to be done with the approval of the govt., sending in three tenders, one in their own name, & two in the names of others, with a common mistake as to price of a portion of the work in all three. Deft. McQ., whose brother had been admitted to the firm as a partner without the payment of any capital, was both a member of Parliament & of the harbour commission. The three tenders with others were received & opened by the comrs., deft., McG., being present, & were then forwarded to govt. at Ottawa. Deft., McG., went to Ottawa & succeeded in obtaining from govt. engineer particulars of the calculations & results of all the tenders sent in, of which he advised his brother by letters. When the mistake in the price was notified by the govt. engineer to the three tenderers, one tender was withdrawn, one was varied, so as to make it higher than others, & the firm's was allowed to remain as it was with the manifest error, & so became the lowest tender, & was thus accepted. One govt. engineer was given a situation on the harbour commission, & the chief engineer of the Public Works Department received a valuable present from the firm. As soon as the contract was executed, promissory notes to an amount of many thousand dollars were signed by the firm & given to the deft., McG.:—Held: (1) the transactions, conversations, & written communications between the conspirators were receivable in evidence in the circumstances. If at first not*

The Crown then sought to put to the jury a letter from Cox, San Francisco, to the accused here, dated July 19, 1910, in which Cox writes that he "gave it up for a bad job, as I could not do anything without the fiver, & I have not received the fiver you speak about in your letter. . . . ###### ii. Procedure.

965. Mode of trial—Before Lord High Steward.

—The name, style & title of office in the case of a proceeding in the Ct. of the High Steward & before the King in Parliament is the same, but the offices, powers & pre-eminences annexed to them differ very widely, & so does the constitution of the cts. where the offices are executed.

In the Ct. of the High Steward he alone is judge in all points of law & practice. The peers triers are merely judges of fact, & are summoned by virtue of a precept from the High Steward to appear before him on the day appointed by him for the trial, ut rei veritas melius sciri poterit.

The High Steward's commission, after reciting that an indictment has been found against a peer by the grand jury of the proper county, empowers him to send for the indictment, to convene prisoner before him at such day & place as he shall appoint, then & there to hear & determine the matter of such indictment, to cause the peers triers tot et tales per quos rei veritas melius sciri poterit at the same day & place to appear before him, veritateque inde comperta, to proceed to judgment according to the law & custom of England, & thereupon to award execution.

The sole right of judicature is in cases of this kind vested in the High Steward, it resides solely by a co-conspirator is an admissible article of evidence.—H.M. ADVOCATE v. HUNTER (1838), 2 Swin. 1.—SCOT.

c. Statements at & after arrest.—Where a statement of fact made by one of several persons charged with conspiracy is repeated by a detective to another of them & the latter under advice declines to say anything, evidence is inadmissible against

Evidence of a statement made by one of such persons to the prosecutor ought not to be allowed to go to the jury without a caution that it must be disregarded unless they convict the person making it.

A statement made by one of such persons when in custody after the conspiracy is at an end is admissible against others, if it was made for the purpose of protecting the plunder obtained or of giving a confederate an opportunity to escape.—R. v. ECCLES (1881), 7 V. L. R. 36.—AUS.

It is no doubt clear that in order to bring a case within sect. 11 of the Act there must be a preparation in the Queen's Dominions, but I think that, when you have got that fact established, there may be assistance in such preparation, or an employment of the kind mentioned in the sect., outside the Queen's Dominions which will amount to an offence against the Act, if the person tendering such assistance or accepting such employment be a subject of Her Majesty (LORD RUSSELL, C.J.).

by virtue of Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act, 1849 (c. 96), & as it appeared that by virtue of the above imperial statutes & various acts of the colonial legislature, a sentence of penal servitude could be carried into execution in the colony, the return to the writ that they were in custody "to undergo such sentence" was sufficient.—*R. v. It is clear that there may be cases where a person has committed a crime in a foreign country without ever being there, & who therefore could not be said to have fled from that country, & that is why the Act expressly defines the meaning of the expression "fugitive criminal" (CAVE, J.).—*R. v. Prisoner & deceased were foreigners, & the latter died at Liverpool from injuries inflicted by prisoner on board a foreign ship on the high seas:—Held: the offence was not cognizable by our law, & the conviction for manslaughter was wrong.

The injury which caused the death was inflicted by one foreigner upon another on board a foreign vessel upon the high seas; & consequently, if death had then & there followed, no offence cognizable by the law of this country would have taken place. 9 Geo. 4, c. 41, s. 8, therefore, is inapplicable; & unless it be applicable, the conviction cannot be sustained (WILLES, J.).—*R. v. ##### A. In General.

1090. Rights & liabilities of persons on board ship.—(1) The Admty. jurisdiction of England extends over British vessels, not only when they are sailing on the high seas, but also when they are in the rivers of a foreign territory at a place below bridges, where the tide ebbs & flows, & where great ships go. All seamen, whatever their nationality, serving on board British vessels, are amenable to the provisions of British law.

An American citizen serving on board a British ship caused the death of another American citizen serving on board the same ship, under circumstances amounting to manslaughter, the ship at the time being in the river Garonne within French territory, at a place below bridges where the tide ebbed & flowed, & great ships went:—Held: the ship was within the Admty. jurisdiction, & prisoner was rightly tried & convicted at the Central Criminal Ct. 1102. On high seas—Definition of high seas.]—The expression “high seas” when used with reference to the jurisdiction of the Ct. of Admty., included all oceans, seas, bays, channels, rivers, creeks, & waters below low-water mark, & where great ships could go, with the exception only of such parts of such oceans, etc., as were within the body of some county (LINDLEY, L.J.).

A foreign or colonial port, if it was part of the high seas in the above sense, would be as within the jurisdiction of the Admty. as any other part of the high seas. The jurisdiction, however, is necessarily limited in its application. It can only be exercised over persons or ships when they come to this country. An artificial basin or dock excavated out of land, but into which water from the high seas could be made to flow, would not, I apprehend, be in any sense part of the high seas, whether such basin or dock were in this country or any other (LINDLEY, L.J.).—THE MECCA, [1895] P. 95; 64 L. 1109. — Even though illegally detained on ship.]—A foreigner on board an English ship on the high seas is subject to the law of England, & therefore, if he there does an act which is a criminal offence by the law of England, he may be punished for it by that law, & may, by virtue of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 91, s. 21, be tried for the offence before any ct. of justice in the Queen's dominions having cognisance of such crimes when committed within its limits, within whose jurisdiction he may be brought, for when so brought, he is, within the language of the Act, “found within its jurisdiction.” Nor is it material, as to the liability of the foreigner to punishment or to the jurisdiction of the ct. to try him, that he was illegally & by force taken on board the English ship & there detained in custody at the time of the commission of the offence, the act alleged to be a crime not being committed for the purpose of releasing himself from the illegal duress.

C. On Foreign Ships.

1124. General rule—Within three mile limit.]

—Prisoner was indicted at the Central Criminal Ct. for manslaughter. He was a foreigner & in command of a foreign ship, passing within three miles of the shore of England on a voyage to a foreign port, & whilst within that distance his ship ran into a British ship & sank her, whereby a passenger on board the latter ship was drowned. The facts of the case were such as to amount to manslaughter by English law:—Held: (1) (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., BRETT & AMPHLETT, JJ.A., GROVE, DENMAN, & LINDLEY, JJ., diss.), the Central Criminal Ct. had no jurisdiction to try prisoner for the offence charged, on the ground that, prior to 28 Hen. 8, c. 15, the admiral had no jurisdiction to try offences by foreigners on board foreign ships, whether within or without the limit of three miles from the shore of England, that that & the subsequent statutes only transferred to the Common Law Cts. & the Central Criminal Ct. the jurisdiction formerly possessed by the admiral, & therefore, in the absence of statutory enactment the Central Criminal Ct. had no power to try such an offence; (2) (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., BRETT & AMPHLETT, JJ.A., GROVE, DENMAN, & LINDLEY, JJ., diss.), the Central Criminal Ct. had no jurisdiction to try prisoner for the offence charged, on the ground that, prior to 28 Hen. 8, c. 15, the admiral had no jurisdiction to try offences by foreigners on board foreign ships, whether within or without the limit of three miles from the shore of England, that that & the subsequent statutes only transferred to the Common Law Cts. & the Central Criminal Ct. the jurisdiction formerly possessed by the admiral, & therefore, in the absence of statutory enactment the Central Criminal Ct. had no power to try such an offence; (3) (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., BRETT & AMPHLETT, JJ.A., GROVE, DENMAN, & LINDLEY, JJ., diss.), the Central Criminal Ct. had no jurisdiction to try prisoner for the offence charged, on the ground that, prior to 28 Hen. 8, c. 15, the admiral had no jurisdiction to try offences by foreigners on board foreign ships, whether within or without the limit of three miles from the shore of England, that that & the subsequent statutes only transferred to the Common Law Cts. & the Central Criminal Ct. the jurisdiction formerly possessed by the admiral, & therefore, in the absence of statutory enactment the Central Criminal Ct. had no power to try such an offence.

English criminal law extended over those limits, & the admiral formerly had, & the Central Criminal Ct. now has, jurisdiction to try offences there committed although on board foreign ships; (3) (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., & DENMAN, J.) prisoner's ship having run into a British ship & sunk it, & so caused the death of a passenger on board the latter ship, the offence was committed on board a British ship, & therefore, the Central Criminal Ct. had jurisdiction.

(4) Whatever of the sea lies within the body of a country is within the jurisdiction of the common law. Whatever does not, belonged formerly to that of the Admty., & now belongs to the cts. to which the jurisdiction of the admiral has been transferred by statute; while in the estuaries & mouths of great rivers, below the bridges, in the matter of murder & mayhem, the jurisdiction is concurrent. On the shore of the outer sea the body of the country extend so far as the land is uncovered by water. So rigorous has been the line of demarcation between the two jurisdictions, as regards the shore between the high & low water mark, the jurisdiction has been divided between the Admty. & the common law according to the state of the tide (COCKBURN, C.J.).—R. v. KEYN (1876), 2 Ex. D. 63; 46 L. J. M. C. 17; 41 J. P. 517; 13 Cox, C. C. 403, C. C. R.

1146. — Death on English ship.]—The crew of an English ship being on shore, a quarrel arose between a Spaniard & one of them, which led to blows by the Spaniard, which killed the other. The death took place on board the ship. The Spaniard was brought to England, & indicted & tried in London under a special commission issued in pursuance of 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 7:—Held: under the circumstances, he could not be convicted (1) as he was not a "subject of His Majesty" within the meaning of sect. 7 of the Act, (2) as the death was on shipboard, though the blows were given on shore, the offence could not be said to have been committed according to the words of the statute, "on land out of the United Kingdom."—R. v. DE MATROS (1836), 7 C. & P. 458.

1146a. Offence under Aliens Order—Punishable on summary conviction.]—An objection that a statutory order has not been formally proved must be taken at the trial by a person charged with an offence under such order. If the objection is not taken then, the point cannot be raised on appeal. Aliens Restriction (Amendment) Act, 1919 (c. 92), has not repealed Aliens Restriction Act, 1914 (c. 12), s. 1 (1). Where, therefore, a person is charged with an offence under an order made under these Acts, the onus is upon that person to prove that he is not an alien & is not on the prosecution to prove that he is an alien. Offences under the Aliens Order, 1920, are triable only in cts. of summary jurisdiction & not on indictment.—R. v. KAKALO, [1923] 2 K. B. 793; 92 L. J. K. B. 997; 129 L. T. 477; 87 J. P. 184; 39 T. 1149. — Jurisdiction of counties—Road repair.]—If a parish lies in two counties, the indictment for not repairing the highways must be laid in the county where the ruinous road lies.

This part of the parish here indicted is not a particular precinct; it is the whole of the parish that lies within this county of G., & it might have been laid so; the indictment must be confined to the county (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—R. v. WESTON UNDER PENYARD (INHABITANTS) (1770), 4 Burr. 2507; 98 E. R. 314.

Weston* (LORD KENYON, C.J.); R. v. Bridgewater (1839), 10 Ad. & El. 711.

1150. — Offence in county city—Trial in county at large.]—Perjury being committed at B., within the limits of the City of G., which is a county in itself, on the trial of a cause before a jury of the county at large; the indictment may be found & tried by juries of the county at large. The King cannot, by charter, authorise the trial of crimes out of the county where they were committed.—R. v. GOUGH (1781), 2 Doug. K. B. 791; 99 E. R. 503.

1151. — Misdemeanours—Libel.]—On information for writing, composing, & publishing a libel in the county of L. it appeared that deft., on Aug. 22, wrote & composed the libel in L., & that he was seen in L. on that & the following day. On Aug. 24 the libel was delivered in the county of M. by A. to B., being inclosed in an envelope addressed to A., containing written directions to A. to forward the libel to B., by whom it was subsequently published in M. The envelope was open, & it was not proved that there was on it any trace of a seal or post-mark. A was not called at the trial as a witness by either party, nor was it proved that he was a resident, or had been about that time in L.:—Held: where deft. wrote & composed a libel in L. with the intent to publish, & afterwards published it in M., he might be indicted for a misdemeanour in either county.

PART II. SECT. 3. SUB-SECT. 1.—A.

1148 i. General rule.—Where offence committed.]—A criminal must be tried in the county or judicial district where the crime is alleged to have been committed.—R. v. MALOTT (1886), 1 B. C. R., pt. 11, 212.—CAN.

1148 ii. —.]—A person charged with an indictable offence has prima facie the right to be tried in the district in which the offence is supposed to have been committed. That right is derived from the common law.—R. v. LYNN (1911), 16 W. L. R. 324; 4 Sask. L. R. 324.—CAN.

1148 iii. —.]—As a general rule, accused should be tried in the district where the offence was committed; but the arrest & committal for trial in one district are enough to confer jurisdiction in the local ct., although the offence was committed in another judicial district, accused having the right to apply for a change of venue.—R. v. ROCHON (1923), Q. R. 35 K. B. 208.—CAN.

1156 i. Where act is act of commission—Perjury—Place where oath is taken.]—Prisoner being indicted for perjury in giving evidence upon a charge for felony against G., it appeared that the felony was committed in the county of M., if at all. The justices before whom the examination took place entertained

To write & publish a libel is a misdemeanour compounded of distinct parts, each of which part, being an act done in prosecution of one & the same criminal intention, is a misdemeanour. Where a misdemeanour consists of such distinct parts the whole may be tried in that county wherein any part can be proved to have been done (ABBOTT, C.J.).—R. v. CAN. (1891), 26 C. P. 139.—

1159. — Forgery—Whether at place of uttering.]—If a person authorise another to sign a note in his name, dated at a particular place, & made payable at a banker's; & the person in whose name it is drawn, represent it to be the name of another person, with intent to defraud, & no such person as the note & the representation import, exists, this is forgery, for it is a false making of an instrument in the name of a non-existing person.

With respect to deft. P., we are of opinion that there was not sufficient evidence to show that the forgery was committed by him in the county of M., where the indictment was laid; for the bare fact of the note having been uttered in that county by B., taking him even to be an accomplice, is no evidence of the forgery itself having been committed there (per CUR.).—*R. v. Four days previously the bkpts. received several bank notes, & on the same day crossed over to Belgium, where they remained for a considerable time. Some of these identical notes were afterwards received by mercantile houses in London from places in Belgium, to which the bkpts. were traced, but there was no evidence as to how or where the notes were dealt with by them from the moment of their receiving them. In their possession, when they were apprehended, an account of their expenditure in Belgium, the items being stated in foreign coin. The bkpts. were followed to England, & there arrested, & when before the Bkpcy. Ct. they gave no account of the disposal of the notes in question:—Held:

(1) there was no evidence of any offence committed within this realm, for if the notes were changed in this country, such a disposal must have taken place on June 17, & therefore, before the adjudication, & if disposed of abroad, that, as well as the disposal of the proceeds, was a complete offence there; (2) although a subsequent non-accounting was evidence of a fraudulent appropriation, it was not any part of the crime of embezzlement.

(3) An act of omission can have no locality except the place where the thing ought to have been done. If the non-accounting in this instance was the offence no doubt the omission took place in England (ALDERSON, B.).—R. v. DAVISON & GORDON (1855), 7 Cox, C. C. 158.

1225. Where court has limited jurisdiction.]—The provision in 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 12, as to offences committed within 500 yards of the boundaries of counties, is confined to county boundaries & to prosecutions in counties. It does not apply to prosecutions in limited jurisdictions.

Prisoner was tried at the general quarter sessions of the peace for the town & borough of Southwark on an indictment charging him with stealing within the town & borough, & the larceny from the person, the apprehension of prisoner, & the finding the property upon him, were all within the City of London, but within 500 yards of the county of Surrey. The recorder directed the jury to acquit prisoner, on the ground of their being incompetent to try felony, which had been committed certainly in the City of London, & prosecutor was then bound over to prefer his bill at the Old Bailey, & prisoner on his arraignment at the Old Bailey, on the bill found by the London grand jury for the same felony, pleaded autrefois acquit in Southwark, founded on 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 12:—Held: the plea was properly overruled, on the ground that 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 12, did not extend to trials in limited jurisdictions, but only to county trials.—WELSH'S CASE (1827), 1 Mood. Deft. removed the indictment by certiorari, & a venire was awarded into the county of L., where he was tried & convicted. The offence was committed in a part of parish which is in the borough, & within 500 yds. from the boundary of L.:—Held: the venue, as laid, was in N., & notwithstanding the proceedings under the certiorari, the trial was without jurisdiction, & judgment must be arrested; the words "at the parish aforesaid" could not be rejected; & for the trial to be good in either county, under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 12, the offence must have been laid & tried in one & the same county.—*R. v. #### D. Offences committed upon Journeys.

1240. Journey partly within jurisdiction.]—On an indictment for assault, it was proved that the offence was committed in one of the carriages of a train running from Brighton to New Cross & before the train arrived at the T. station, in the county of Sussex. At that station prosecutrix left the carriage in which she had been riding with deft., & rode in another carriage of the same train to New Cross, which is within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Ct.:—Held: by the joint operation of Criminal Law Act, 1826 (c. 64), s. 13, & Central Criminal Ct. Act, 1834 (c. 36), s. 2, the indictment was properly preferred & tried at the Central Criminal Ct.—R. v. FRENCH (1859), 8 Cox, C. C. 252.

1241. —.]—Prisoner was indicted for the murder of her infant child. She was seen to leave W., a place within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Ct., by train, & she then had the child with her. She arrived the same evening at a house near G., a place outside the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Ct. She was then alone but was carrying a brown paper parcel. She returned the next day to a place within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Ct., taking the parcel with her:—Held: there was jurisdiction to try prisoner at the Central Criminal Ct.—R. v. BEXLEY (1906), 70 J. P. 263.

1242. Journey through several jurisdictions—Criminal Law Act, 1826 (c. 64), s. 13.]—Sect. 13 of the above Act is not confined in its operation to the carriages of common carriers, or to public conveyances; but if property is stolen from any carriage employed in any journey, the offender may, by virtue of that section, be tried in any county through any part whereof such carriage shall have passed in the course of the journey during which such offence shall have been committed.

The object of the statute was to enable a prosecutor, whose property is stolen from any carriage on a journey, to prosecute in any county through any part of which the carriage shall have passed in the course of that journey; because, in many cases, it might be quite impossible for a prosecutor to ascertain at what part of the journey the offence was actually committed (JERVIS, C.J.).—R. v. SHARP (1854), Dears. C. C. 415; 24 L. J. M. C. 40; 24 L. T. O. S. 170; 18 J. P. 743; 3 W. R. 21; 6 Cox, C. C. 418, C. C. R.

1243. What is offence committed in course of journey—Criminal Law Act, 1826 (c. 64), s. 13.]—Prisoner was indicted in the county of C. for larceny committed on a journey under sect. 13 of the above Act. It appeared that, as the guard of the coach from P. in the county of C. to K. in the county of W., he had been entrusted with a bankers' parcel & when changing horses some distance from P., & in the county of W., he took the parcel from the coach, & while at a privy abstracted two sovereigns therefrom:—Held: the stealing was not "in or upon the coach," so not within the statute, & the indictment should be preferred in the county of W.—SHARPE'S CASE (1836), 2 Lew. C. C. 233.

1244. —.]—Where the evidence is consistent with the fact of an article having been abstracted from a railway carriage, either in the course of the journey through the county of A. or after its arrival at its ultimate destination, in the county of B., & prisoner is indicted in A. under sect. 13 of the above Act, the case must go to the jury, who are to say whether they are satisfied that the larceny was committed in the course of the journey or afterwards.—*R. v. R.

1254 iii. —.]—In a prosecution for criminal libel it is not sufficient in order to obtain a change of venue, to allege that prosecutor is interested in politics in the place where the libel is alleged to have been committed, & that, therefore accused cannot obtain a fair trial.—*R. v. 1254 iv. —.]—The principle on which a change of venue in a criminal case will be ordered under s. 651 of the Criminal Code is, that there is fair & reasonable probability of partiality & prejudice in the district, county, or place, within which the indictment would otherwise be tried. On a motion to change the venue, notwithstanding that a strong case was made out for the change, if the balance of convenience alone was to be considered, still, as it was not shown that there was or was likely to be any prejudice against accused, & certainly no more where the indictment was found than in the place to which it was proposed to change the venue, the motion was refused.—*R. v. 1254 v. —.]—Accused, who had been sheriff of the judicial district of C., was tried in that district upon a charge of fraudulently converting moneys in his hands to his own use & thereby stealing it. The jury disagreed, & the Crown asked that, before accused should be put on trial for the second time, the place of trial should be changed.—Held: in a proper case, under s. 884 of the Criminal Code, a change of the place of trial can be ordered. There was no real danger that a jury could not be obtained in the judicial district of C., who would render a fair & impartial verdict on the trial, & the application would be refused.—*R. v. 1254 x. —.]—A. was tried for felony, but the jury were not able to agree upon a verdict, & were discharged. The Crown moved to have a second trial in some other county, on the ground that a fair trial could not be had in the county where the offence was committed. Affidavits were made on both sides:—Held: the ct. had the same jurisdiction to change the place of trial in felony as in misdemeanour, & the place of trial should be changed in this case, as the ct. was of opinion, upon the affidavits, that a fair trial could not be had in the county where the offence was committed.—R. v.

1254 xiv. —.]—In an indictment for murder the trial was postponed on the ground that an impartial trial could not be had. It appeared on affidavit that large numbers of the jurors who would try the case, were members of an assoc. called "The Land League," which assoc. had subscribed to the defence of prisoners, the crime being of an agrarian nature. The venue was changed from the local one to a district where it appeared probable a fair & impartial trial could be had.—R. v. PHELAN (1881), 14 Cox, C. C. 679.—IR.

p. ——— Whether difficulty in securing attendance of witnesses sufficient.]—The ct. has no power to change the venue in a criminal case, nor will they order a suggestion to be entered on the roll to change the place of trial in an information for libel, on the ground of inconvenience & difficulty in securing the attendance of deft.'s witnesses.—R. v. CAVENISH (1847), 2 Cox, C. C. 175.—IR.

q. ———.]—In a criminal information for libel, it is no ground to enter a suggestion that a fair trial cannot be had at a particular venue, that many of the witnesses sworn to be necessary for the defence reside at a distance from the local where the venue is laid, & deft. has no funds to bring them to that venue.—R. v. CASEY (1877), 13 Cox, C. C. 614.—IR.

r. Order made under statute—No provision for expenses.]—An order made pursuant to 32 & 33 Vict. c. 29, s. 11, directing a change of venue, would be sufficient although containing expenses, when the indictment has been pleaded to & the trial proceeded with without objection & even in a Ct. of Error there could be no valid objection to a conviction founded on such order.—SPOULE v. R. (1886), 1 B. C. R., pt. II., 219; 12 S. C. R. 140.—CAN.

s. Jurisdiction of county to which venue changed—Further offence appearing in depositions charged in indictment.]—Prisoner was committed for trial in one county upon a charge of perjury alleging an offence committed in that county. The venue was changed to another county, where he was tried & found guilty upon an indictment containing two counts, alleging two offences arising out of the same matter. The facts relating to both of the charges appeared in the depositions taken by the committing magistrate:—Held: there was jurisdiction to try for both offences in the county to which number of weeks, months or years, but if delayed the delay must be reasonably accounted for (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—R. v. ROBINSON (1765), 1 Wm. Bl. 541; 96 E. R. 313.

1264. ——— Must be without delay.]—A criminal information must, in all cases, be moved for promptly & without delay.—R. v. HEXT (1840), 4 J. P. 283; 4 Jur. 339.

1265. ———.]—The ct. refused to grant a rule nisi for a criminal information, where the libel complained of came to the knowledge of appt. two years ago.—Ex p. HOPPER (1854), 23 L. T. O. S. 164; 18 J. P. 378; 2 W. R. 517.

1269. — Evidence of acts done more than six months before.]—Accused was indicted for unlawfully & carnally knowing a girl under the age of sixteen within six months of the commencement of the prosecution, under sect. 5 of the above Act, which, as amended by Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (c. 15), s. 27, provides that no prosecution of this offence shall be commenced more than six months after its commission. At the trial evidence was admitted of previous acts & conduct of accused which tended to prove that he had had connection with the girl more than six months before the commencement of the prosecution:—Held: the evidence was admissible to prove the offence with which prisoner was charged, although it might prove a previous offence for which he could not be prosecuted.—R. v. d. Prosecution out of time—Whether prosecution can be revived under amending Act increasing time limit.]—An indictment was preferred against prisoner charging him, under Criminal Code Act, 1893, s. 196, with the commission of an offence on July 25, 1905. The prosecution was not commenced until Oct. 6, 1905, more than one month & less than six months after commission of the offence. The time limit of one month in the above-mentioned Act expired on Aug. 26, 1905. On Aug. 30, 1905, Criminal Code Act Amendment Act, 1905, came into operation, & by sect. 2 the time lines (other than service lines) near the mains of a gas co. On Oct. 2, 1903, the gas co. by letter to the electric light co. complained that the lines were being laid in a manner which was injurious to the gas mains, & required the lines to be relaid in a proper manner. Correspondence then ensued between the two co.'s, in the course of which the gas co., by letters of Oct. 27 & Nov. 2, 1903, respectively, specified their requirements with respect to the laying of the electric lines. Throughout the correspondence the electric light co., who completed the work of laying their lines on or before Oct. 31, 1903, disputed the reasonableness of the gas co.'s requirements, & they did not at any time comply with them. The questions & differences which had arisen between the two co.'s were, shortly after Nov. 2, 1903, referred to arb'n. under Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899 (c. 19), Sched., s. 18, & on Feb. 12, 1904, the arbitrator made his award, finding in effect that the electric light co. had not conformed with the requirements of the gas co., & awarding to the latter a sum as full compensation for the loss & injury they had thereby sustained. On Apr. 29, 1904, the gas co.'s solrs. wrote to the electric light co.'s solrs. pointing out that the electric light co. had made no attempt to comply with the gas co.'s requirements, & threatening proceedings for penalties under sect. 18 of the Act unless an undertaking were given that those requirements would be fully complied with. On May 31, 1904, a complaint was made on behalf of the gas co. alleging that "on & since Oct. 2, 1903," the electric light co. had made default in complying with certain requirements of sect. 18 of the Act; that they had laid their new electric lines too near the gas co.'s mains, & did not conform & had not conformed with the gas co.'s requirements for protecting from injury their mains, & for securing access thereto. On the hearing of the complaint before justices they convicted the electric light co. of the offence alleged in it:—Held: the complaint & conviction sufficiently alleged an offence completed within six months before the time when the complaint was made, & were, therefore, not bad on the face of them under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), s. 11, nor did the facts proved before the justices & above stated show a completed offence before the statutory period of limitation began to run.

He again visited the factory on Mar. 12, 1908, & found that the same wheel was not securely fenced, & finding it, on a third visit on July 1, 1908, still not securely fenced, he laid an information on July 22, 1908, against resps. in respect thereof. The justices dismissed the information on the ground that the information had not been laid within three months after the date at which the offence came to appl't.'s knowledge:—Held: there was a continuing offence in not securely fencing the fly-wheel & the justices were therefore wrong in dismissing the information on the ground that it had not been laid in time.—*VERNEY v. 1285 i. Laying the information.]—When a person committed for trial by justices on a charge of offence against a female under Crimes Act, 1915, s. 48, is afterwards presented for trial on such charge, the commencement of the proceedings before justices is the commencement of the prosecution within sect. 47 of that Act.—R. v. CONLEY, [1916] V. L. R. 639.—AUS.

1285 iii. —.]—Prisoners were indicted under Insolvent Act, 1869, s. 147, for having within three months preceding the execution of an assignment in insolvency pawned, pledged, & disposed of, otherwise than in the way of trade, certain goods which had remained unpaid for during the said three months. The goods, which had been purchased on credit, the period of which had not expired when prisoners were indicted, were given on the day of assignment, but before its execution, to a clerk on account of salary due to him, & to indemnify him against accommodation indorsements, to a carter in their employ, in satisfaction of a sum of money previously deposited with them, & to a son who had given them accommodation notes. The indictment was found on Oct. 23, but the information had been laid & prisoners arrested before Sept. 1, when the Insolvent Act, 1875, came into force:—Held: the disposal of the goods as above was an offence within sect. 147; & it was no objection that such disposal was not to their own use but to satisfy creditors, & the time of credit on which the insolvents had purchased the goods had not expired when defts. made their assignments.

1288. — Indictment ignored & a fresh information laid.]—Qu.: whether the preferring of an indictment against a party for night poaching which is ignored, is a commencement of the prosecution within Night Poaching Act, 1828 (c. 69), s. 4, so as to warrant the conviction of the party on another indictment preferred four years after the offence.—*R. v. 1285 v. —.]—S. was convicted under the Liquor License Act, 1889, of selling liquor without a license. The information was laid before one justice of the peace, but the prosecution was heard before two justices. Deft. was convicted, & a sum for witness fees was included in the costs awarded him against. Deft. obtained a rule nisi to quash the conviction. On its return rule was made absolute. At this stage the A.-G., although not a party to the proceedings, intervened & moved before the full ct. against this decision. The parties to the proceedings did not complain of the decision:—Held: the laying of the information was the bringing of the prosecution; it ought to have been laid before two justices; the matter of the prosecution was not, therefore, properly before the two justices on the hearing of the case, & they had no jurisdiction to determine it.—*R. v. 1294. — Not the amending of the information — Unless a different offence is charged.—By Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 5, as amended by Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (c. 15), s. 27, a prosecution for the offence of unlawfully having carnal knowledge of a girl between thirteen & sixteen years of age must be commenced within six months after the commission of the offence.

Applt. was charged with having had carnal knowledge of a girl between thirteen & sixteen years of age. The information, which was sworn on May 3, 1919, charged the offence as having been committed between Nov. 6 & 7, 1918. Subsequently, on May 13, 1919, the information was amended, the date when the offence was alleged to have been committed being altered to between Nov. 3 & 8, 1918. The girl gave evidence at the trial that applt. had connection with her on Nov. 4, 1918. Applt., who was convicted, appealed against his conviction on the ground that the proceedings were out of time, having been commenced on May 13, when the information was amended, which date was more than six months after Nov. 4, the date of the commission of the offence:—Held: the amendment of the information on May 13, 1919, was not the commencement of the prosecution, which took place on May 3, when the information was originally laid, as the amendment did not charge a different offence from that charged in the information as originally laid, & that as the dates inserted in the amended information as the dates within which the offence had been committed were all within six months of May 3, when the information was laid, the prosecution was not out of time.—R. v. WAKELEY, [1920] 1 K. B. 688; 89 L. J. K. B. 97; 122 L. T. 623; 84 J. P. 31; 64 Sol. Jo. 360; 26 Cox, C. C. 569; 14 Cr. App. A.

1295. — Proceedings are "pending" after arrest.—A person accused of an offence under Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 2, was arrested & charged before, & tried & convicted after, the commencement of Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912 (c. 20). He was sentenced to be whipped under sect. 3 of the 1912 Act:—Held: proceedings were pending at the commencement of the 1912 Act, within the meaning of sect. 8, & there was no power to impose the sentence of whipping.—*R. v. 1297. Proof of commencement of proceedings — Whether oral evidence of apprehension sufficient.—On an indictment on 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, it is incumbent on prosecutor to show that the prosecution was commenced within three months. Proof by parol that prisoner was apprehended for treason respecting the coin within the three months will not be sufficient if the indictment is after the three months, & the warrant to apprehend or to commit is not produced.—R. v. PHILLIPS (1818), Russ. & Ry. 369, C. C. R.

Annotations:—Refd. R. v. Brooks & Gibson (1847), 1 Den. 217; R. v. Hull (1860), 2 F. & F. 16.

1298. ——On the trial of an indictment under Night Poaching Act, 1828 (c. 69), s. 9, it appeared that the offence was committed on Jan. 12, 1844. The indictment was preferred on Mar. 1, 1845. The warrant of commitment by which deft. was committed to take his trial for this offence was given in evidence, & was dated Dec. 11, 1844:—Held: it was sufficiently shown that the prosecution was commenced "within twelve calendar months after the commission" of the offence, within sect. 4 of the Act.—R. v. AUSTIN (1845), 1 Car. & Kir. 621.

Annotations:—Refd. R. v. Hull (1860), 2 F. & F. 16; R. v. Parker & Smith (1864), 12 W. R. 765; R. v. Casbolt (1869), 21 L. T. 263; Beardsley v. Giddings (1904), 73 L. J. K. B. 378.

1299. — Warrant produced but not the information.—On an indictment for offences under Night Poaching Act, 1828 (c. 69), the warrant without the information is not legal evidence that the proceedings were commenced within the twelve months fixed by the Act.—R. v. PARKER & SMITH (1864), Le. & Ca. 459; 4 New Rep. 115; 33 L. J. M. C. 135; 10 L. T. 463; 28 J. P. 359; 10 Jur. N. S. 596; 12 W. R. 765; 9 Cox, C. C. 475, C. C. R.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1301. Object of bail—To secure attendance of accused at trial.—(1) It is no objection to the persons proposed as bail in a criminal case, that they are indemnified by or on behalf of prisoners.

(2) The object of bail is to secure, by a pecuniary penalty, the appearance of prisoner at the trial (MARTIN, B.).—R. v. BROOME (1851), 18 L. T. O. S. 19; sub nom. R. v. BROOME, Ex p. STADEN, Ex p. JAMES, 15 J. P. 644.

Broome* that there is no objection to the indemnification of bail, which opinion was acted on by the Recorder of London in R. v. Stockwell (1902), 66 J. P. 376; it is sufficient to say that we do not agree with the opinion of Martin, B. (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).

1302. Right of bail to surrender accused—May take him on Sunday.—ANON. (1704), 6 Mod. Rep. 231; 87 E. R. 982.

The bail has a right to surrender deft. whether with or without his consent, which is immaterial (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—R. v. BUTCHER (1792), Peake, 226, N. P.

1304. — Accused not protected by privilege.—A witness attending to give evidence in a ct. of justice, who absconded from his bail, may be re-taken by the bail in ct. & he is not protected by his subpoena.—HORN v. SWINFORD (1822), Dow. & Ry. N. P. 20; 1 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 361.

1305. — Deemed to be in custody of his bail.—A witness is not privileged from arrest by his bail on his return from giving evidence.

A witness who has given bail is always supposed to be in the custody of his bail, even whilst he is attending as a witness in ct. (ABBOTT, C.J.).—Ex p. LYNE (1822), 3 Stark. 132, N. P.

1306. — Admission to bail only a change of custody.—The admitting to bail is only a change of custody. The bail might retake the person bailed, & send him back to prison at any time (COLERIDGE, J.).—FOXALL v. BARNETT (1853), 2 E. & B. 928; 22 L. T. O. S. 100; 2 W. R. 61; 2 C. L. R. 273; 118 E. o. — — —.]—Exercise of discretion.—In exercising its discretion under Criminal Procedure Code, s. 498, the High Ct. should not confine its attention only to the question, whether prisoner is likely to abscond or not. There may be other circumstances, which may also affect the question of granting bail to accused persons charged with crimes of a grave character. If a person is accused before a magistrate of a non-bailable offence then, unless he considers that there are no reasonable grounds for believing him to be guilty, he must refuse bail, though he may be certain that accused will stand his trial.—NARENDRA LAL KHAN v. R. (1908), 1 L. R. 36 Cal. 166.—IND.

1336. Probability of accused appearing at trial.]—The principle on which a party committed to take his trial for an offence may be bailed is founded on the probability of his appearing to take his trial, & not on his supposed guilt or innocence, but the fact of a true bill for felony having been found against him is material in estimating that probability.—*R. v. 1336 i. Probability of accused appearing at trial.]—On an appln. for bail the test to govern the ct. is the probability of prisoner appearing to take his trial. In applying the test, the ct. will consider the nature of the crime, the evidence against prisoner, & the severity of the punishment which may be imposed.—R. v. FRASER (1892), 13 N. S. W. L. Danger to accused's health.]—A. & B. while walking together, were separately fired at by the same hand. A. was killed by the shot fired at him, B. was not hurt. C. was indicted for the murder of A., & acquitted. A warrant was afterwards issued to arrest C. on the charge of firing at B. with intent to kill. C., being informed of the issuing of the warrant, remained concealed for some time, but surrendered himself in time for trial at the next assizes:—Held:

under these circumstances, as there was a probability that prisoner would stand his trial on the charge of firing at B. with intent to kill, & as, according to the certificate of a medical man, his health would be impaired by further confinement, he was entitled to be admitted to bail.—R. v. GRAY (1843), 2 Leg. Rep. 267.—IR.

1342 i. Nature of charge—True bill found.]—Prisoner being confined in gaol upon a charge of arson, in settling down to a dwelling-house, while persons he had applied for his trial refused at the last session of the Ct. of Queen's Bench, & that there was no sufficient evidence to warrant his detention:—Held: although a true bill had been found against him by the grand jury, he might be admitted to bail, inasmuch as the depositions against him were found to create a very slight supposition of his guilt.—Ex p. MAGUIRE (1857), 7 L. C. R. 57.—CAN.

1343 i. —Probability of conviction.]—The guilt or innocence of a prisoner is not the question to decide on application for bail on a criminal charge. 1344. —Severity of punishment.]—(1) The ct. has a discretion to admit accused persons to bail in all cases, but, in exercising that discretion, the nature of the charge, the evidence by which it is supported, & the sentence which by law may be passed in the event of a conviction, are in general the most important ingredients for the guidance of the ct., & where these are weighty, the ct. will not interfere.

(2) Four foreigners were committed, on the coroner's inquest & by the warrant of justices, to take their trial for wilful murder committed in a duel. Two of them, when before the committing magistrates, avowed that they acted as seconds to the deceased. An application was made on their behalf to this ct. to admit them to bail, on affidavits, by these prisoners, that they had only as seconds, that the duel was fair, that they were foreigners ignorant of the law & believing rule generally is to admit him to bail; but the court is bound to inquire the general rule is not to grant the application for bail unless the opportunities to escape do not appear to be possible & it is consequently almost certain that he will appear for trial.—H. v. FORTIER (1902), Q. R. 13 K. B. 251.—CAN.

1343 iii. —.]—Where defts., who were members of an extensive organisation, were accused of a riot arising out of the agitation created by the organisation, bail was refused by the local magistrates:—Held: defts. should not be admitted to bail, considering first, the serious nature of the offence charged; secondly, the probability of the assoc. of which defts. were members furnishing them with funds to indemnify the bailsmen in case of default on the part of defts.—R. v. BUTLER (1881), 14 Cox, C. C. 530.—IR.

a. —Probability of accused appearing at trial.]—The main question for consideration in determining matters of bail is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing accused guilty of the offence charged. Other considerations must also arise in deciding this question, & one of these is whether there are any grounds for supposing that accused would abscond. Under Criminal Procedure Code, s. 497, accused should ordinarily be released on substantial bail until reasonable grounds are made out for presuming his guilt. Whether there are reasonable grounds or not must be decided judicially, that is to say, there should be some tangible evidence on the record on which, if un rebutted, the ct. can conclude that accused might that they were bound as men of honour to act as they did, & that acting as seconds was not punishable in their own country. They pledged themselves, in the event of being admitted to bail, to abide their trial:—Held: assuming these facts to be accurate, they afforded no ground for the ct. interfering to bail persons proved by their own confession to be guilty of a capital offence.

(3) An application was afterwards made in favour of the two other prisoners, who had not made any such confession. This application was made on an affidavit containing a copy of the depositions before the coroner's inquest, & the committing magistrates, prisoners making no affidavit:—Held: the application would be refused.

... convicted. The statement by a witness that he has seen a certain act of an incriminating character done by accused might be sufficient; but if there be no evidence whatsoever, or evidence of a very flimsy character on the face of it, the inference will be, after a reasonable time has elapsed since the beginning of the enquiry, that there are no reasonable grounds for supposing accused to be guilty. The detention of accused under trial is not intended to be penal, but its object is to secure attendance. The gravity of the offence & some evidence of its perpetration by the accused will, however, justify detention.—JAMINI

e. Exercise of discretion—Delay in bringing prisoner to trial.]—Prisoners arrested in Dec. were committed to gaol in the Jan. following, on a charge of treason felony, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12. At the spring assizes, in the following Mar., indictments for treason felony having been preferred & found against prisoners, they were arraigned, pleaded not guilty, & were ready to proceed with their trial, whereupon, the A.-G., on the part of the Crown, applied to the judge of assize to postpone the trial to the next assizes. This application, which was not grounded on affidavit disclosing any cause for the postponement was granted, without discussion, by the judge, who ordered that prisoners

1365 ii. ———.]—The single proper purpose of detaining accused in close custody is to insure his trial in due course, & in all applications for bail, resting in the discretion of a ct. or of a judicial officer, in criminal cases, the paramount question should be, whether the presence of accused for trial in due course would be assured if the application were granted.

Where a true bill had been found against accused, who was charged with murder, although his trial had been postponed at the instance of the Crown, he being ready for trial, & although it was represented by counsel for accused that the case for the Crown was not a strong one, bail was refused, having regard to all the circumstances. There is no hard & fast rule that in a case of murder, accused will not, after bill found, be admitted to bail.—R. v. RAE (1914), 32 O. L. R. 89.—CAN.

1365 iii. ———.]—Accused, charged with murder, should not be admitted to bail where the application is made after a preliminary investigation by a judicial officer, who has committed him for trial as a result of such investigation; & still more is this the case where a true bill has been found.—R. v. GENTILE (1915), 32 W. L. R. 217.—CAN.

1365 iv. ———.]—That prisoner against whom a true bill had been found for murder had been ready for trial at the assizes, & that the trial had been postponed at the request of the Crown will not constitute sufficient ground for concurrently making an order to admit to bail. Semble: prisoner's recourse is to apply on the first day of the following assize to be brought to trial, under Habeas Corpus Act, & in default that he be granted bail.—*R. v. k. ——— Whether granted if depositions show prisoner acted in self-defence.]

—When the depositions taken at the preliminary hearing of a charge of murder clearly show that deceased died by the hand of prisoner & are such as to justify his commitment for trial & sufficient to establish a case to go to the jury, bail should be refused, although it also appears from the depositions that prisoner might be able to convince the jury at the trial that his act was done in self-defence.—R. v. MONVOISIN (1911), 3 Man. L. R. 568.—CAN.

l. ——— Whether after committal by coroner.—On an application by prisoners in custody on a charge of murder, under a coroner's warrant, to be admitted to bail, it is proper to consider the probability of their forfeiting their bail if they know themselves to be guilty. Where in such case there is such a presumption of the guilt of prisoners as to warrant a grand jury in finding a true bill, they should not be bailed. The fact of one assize having passed over since the committal of prisoners, without an indictment having been preferred, is in itself no ground for bail. The application is one of discretion & not of right, prisoners not having brought themselves within 31 Car. II. c. 2, s. 7, by applying on the first day of the assize to be brought to trial.—R. v. MULLADY & DONOVAN (1868), 4 P. R. 314.—CAN.

Subsequent to each committal an inquest was held at which much additional evidence was given, & which tended to exculpate prisoner, & as against him the coroner's jury returned a verdict of not guilty, but found a verdict of wilful murder as against the other three. On a motion to admit prisoner to bail:—Held: the circumstances justified the interference of the ct. to bail him.—R. v. BLACKBURN (1853), 17 J. P. 134.

SECT. 5.—IN FELONY.

c. Opposition to bail.]—When the trial of a prisoner, who has been indicted for a capital offence, is postponed by the judge of assize on an application by the Crown, & such prisoner is ordered to remain in custody, this ct. where Crown counsel object, will not permit such prisoner to stand out on bail, no matter how strong a case may be made, or what amount of bail prisoner is prepared to give.—R. v. MAGINNIS (1852), 5 Cox, C. C. 511.—IR.

d. —Who will be heard in opposition to application for bail—Whether next-of-kin.]—A detachment of soldiers engaged in escorting voters to the poll at a contested election were pelted with stones, & some severely hurt. Two of them fired without orders, & a man in the crowd was killed. There was some evidence as to which of them fired the shot which killed the man. The two soldiers were committed to, & detained in, gaol under two warrants, one of which expired by efflux of time; the other was admittedly invalid. Prisoners having been brought up on habeas corpus, the ct. directed the one against whom there was evidence that he fired the fatal shot to be brought before the magistrates at D. in the usual manner, & expressed an opinion that he ought to be admitted to bail, & discharged the other. The Crown refused either to support or oppose the application to have prisoners discharged, & counsel for the next-of-kin of deceased were heard in opposition to the application.—*R. v. At the adjourned sessions the attorney for the prosecution stated that he should proceed against appls. under Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (c. 97), s. 52, & asked their attorneys whether they would plead guilty to such charge, or whether further evidence should be offered in support of it; they answered that he must go on & prove his case. Other witnesses were then cross-examined, & after the case for the prosecution was closed, the attorneys for appls. objected that as no information on oath had been taken as required by sect. 62, & appls. were not found committing the offence, they were not legally in custody, & therefore the justices had no jurisdiction to convict them of the offence then charged. The offence with which appls. were first charged was a felony punishable under sect. 10; the offence of which they were convicted was punishable on

On the same day a summons was issued on an information laid by resp., under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 47 (2), charging applt. with having the meat in his possession for the purpose of sale. Both the information & the summons stated that resp. was acting on behalf of the borough council, but he had not been expressly authorised by the council to take proceedings against applt. Applt. was convicted:—Held: a private person could prosecute for an offence under sect. 47 (2) of the Act, & the absence of authority on the part of resp. did not invalidate the proceedings, the words "on behalf of" the borough council in the information & summons being merely surplusage.—*GIEBLER v. Applt. was chief ranger of B., & stated on oath that he had a general power to prosecute for offences under the B. bye-laws on behalf of the corp. The present proceedings were initiated, not under the bye-laws, but under Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (c. 97), s. 22. The solr. representing resps. asked for the production of a copy of the minute or resolution authorising applt. to prefer the information. No such authority being produced, he raised the objection that as the information was laid on behalf of the corp. of L. it was laid by a corporate body, & should therefore have been laid by an attorney duly appointed under the common seal or warrant of the corp. It was contended that the justices could not proceed to hear the information. The justices acceded to this view & dismissed the information:—Held: the information was properly laid.—*DUCHESNE v. 1478. Illegal society.]—A mutual society which, in addition to rules for the bond fide mutual relief of sick members, & for other ordinary purposes of a friendly society, includes also rules for the encouragement, relief, & maintenance of men on strike is not a friendly society within the meaning of 18 & 19 Vict. (c. 63), ss. 9 & 44, because such last-mentioned purposes are not analogous to those of friendly societies properly so called, & because such purposes are those of a trades union, & are illegal as being in restraint of trade. Consequently the summary jurisdiction given to the justices by sect. 24 of the Act does not apply to cases of fraud or misappropriation of the funds of such a society on the part of any of its members.—*HORNBY v. A constable has no right to detain a prisoner three days without taking him before a magistrate in order that evidence may be collected in support of a felony with which he is charged.

A constable has no right to handcuff a prisoner except he has attempted to escape, or except it is necessary in order to prevent his escaping.—WRIGHT v. COURT (1825), 4 B. & C. 596; 6 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 623; 3 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 299; 4 L. J. O. S. K. B. 17; 107 E. R. 1182.

1509. —.]—The right of searching persons in custody must depend on the circumstances of each particular case, & the mere fact of a person being drunk & disorderly will not justify a police officer searching his person, although the officer may have received general orders to search all persons in custody; but any person, whatever may be the nature of the charge, may so conduct himself, by reason of violence of language or conduct, that it may be prudent & right to search him, as well for his own protection as for those entrusted with the duty.

The same rule applies to handcuffing persons in custody, & the right must depend on the circumstances of each particular case, as, for instance, the nature of the charge, & the conduct & temper of the person in custody. There cannot be any general rule that will justify a constable in resorting to the extreme measure of handcuffing a person in custody for a misdemeanour to a felon, & marching them through the public streets from the police station to the magistrate's office.—*LEIGH v. C. Searching Prisoner after Arrest—Disposal of Property.

1512. Right to search.—It is often the duty of an officer to search a prisoner. If, for instance, a man is taken in the commission of a felony, he may be searched to see whether the stolen articles are in his possession, or whether he has any instruments of violence about him; &, in like manner, if he be taken on a charge of arson, he may be searched to see whether he has any fire-boxes or matches about his person. It may be highly satisfactory & indeed necessary, that the prisoner should be searched. If a tradesman should be charged with an offence such as non-payment of penalties, & he appeared before the magistrate by counsel & not in person, & a warrant issued against him not charging him with any crime, but merely to make him appear in person, the act of searching him would be contrary to law. It is said that the search might be justified, because the person in custody might have some instrument about him with which he might make away with or injure himself, or the alderman before whom he is brought. This does not appear a satisfactory reason; it assumes that when a man is apprehended, because he has in the first instance appeared by counsel, & not in person, he will take with him the means of committing suicide or murder. This is a most absurd supposition (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—BESSELL v. WILSON (1853), 1 E. & B. 492, n.; 22 L. J. M. C. 94, 95, n.; 20 L. T. O. S. 233, n.; 17 J. P. Jo. 52; 118 E. R. 518.

If a search warrant for stolen goods is executed in pltf.'s house & no stolen goods are found there, but the owner of the stolen goods charges pltf. with having taken them & requests the constable to arrest him, the arrest is good, so far as the constable is concerned, although he might in his discretion have refused to arrest pltf.—WARD'S CASE (1636), Clay. 44.

 Deft. was convicted upon an indictment charging him with assaulting a constable in the execution of his duty. It appeared that the constable whilst standing outside deft.'s house saw him take up a shovel & hold it in a threatening attitude over his wife's head, & heard him at the same time say, "If it was not for the policeman outside I would split your head open"; that in about twenty minutes afterwards deft. left his house, after saying that he would leave his wife altogether, & was taken into custody by the constable, who had no warrant, when he had proceeded a short distance in the direction of his father's residence; & that upon being so taken into custody deft. resisted & assaulted the constable:—Held: the constable was justified in apprehending deft., & the conviction was right.

The policeman himself witnessed what in point of law amounted to an assault, for he saw prisoner hold a shovel over his wife's head, & that act was accompanied by violent language & threats. 1595. — & obstructing public way.—It is not every noise, nor every circumstance alarming to a very timid person which will justify giving charge of the party who misconducts himself. But when a man is standing in the highway opposite to another's house, making a disturbance, exciting others to disturbance & riot, & obstructing the public way, these are facts which may well amount to such a breach of the peace as justifies an arrest (ERLE, J.).—*WEBSTER v. 1596. — Refusal to leave house—Resisting expulsion—Disturbance causing alarm.—If a person conducts himself in a disorderly manner in a public-house, & the landlord requests him to depart, & he refuse to do so, the landlord is justified in laying hands on him to put him out, & if, while the landlord has hold of him to put him out, the person lays hands on the landlord, this is an assault, & if it is seen by a peace-officer, he is justified in taking the person into custody. So, if a person, without committing any assault, make such noise or disturbance in a public-house as would create alarm, this would be such a breach of the peace as would not only justify the landlord in turning the person out of the house, but would justify the landlord in immediately giving the person into the custody of a peace-officer, provided that this had occurred in the presence of the officer.—*HOWELL v. probable grounds, believes that any person has committed that offence, is justified in arresting such person without warrant, whether such person is guilty or not."—Held: as an officer arresting without warrant might be called upon to decide whether or not there were reasonable & probable grounds for the arrest, the section did not apply to an officer arresting for an offence when he is himself the victim & the offence had been already committed & the offender is not being freshly pursued.—R. v. BELYEA (1915), 43 N. B. R. 375.—CAN.

1603. ———.]—To trespass for an assault & false imprisonment, deft. pleaded that he was in lawful possession of a house, & that pltf. was unlawfully therein, & had been requested to depart, but had refused, whereupon deft. gently laid his hands on him to remove him, whereupon pltf. assaulted him in the presence of a policeman, wherefore he caused him to be taken to a police office. Deft. proved all the matters of the plea, except the assault by pltf.:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover damages for the imprisonment.—LEECE v. TAYLOR (1835), 1 Har. & W. 15; 4 Nev. & M. K. WHITING* (1840), 9 C. & P. 262.

1605. ———.]—Pltf. having seen his wife & a man go into a certain house, obtained access thereto, & not finding the man, declared he would remain there until he saw him. Deft., who was lodging there, being much annoyed by pltf., who continued to remain outside the door of his apartments, after urging him in vain to leave, sent for a policeman to remove him, & on his declining to interfere unless he was given in charge, deft. gave him in charge, & he was conveyed to the police-station, at which place deft. attended & declined to make any charge. Upon an action brought for an assault & false imprisonment:—Held: although pltf. was committing a civil trespass, & so might have been removed from the house, yet as he was not actually committing a breach of the peace, his arrest & detention were unlawful.—JORDAN v. GIBBON (1863), 8 L. T. 391.

On special demurrer:—Held: the plea was bad, as not showing that any breach of the peace had been committed, or was apprehended.—GRANT v. MOSER (1843), 5 Man. & G. 123; 6 Scott, N. R. 46; 12 L. Threat to break windows.

—A. went to a house at night, demanding to see the servant. He was told to depart, & would not. A constable was sent for, & A. went from the house to the garden. When the constable arrived, A. said that if a light appeared at the windows he would break them, upon which the constable took him into custody:—Held: the constable was not justified in so doing.—*R. v. The barman went to fetch the change; but before giving it he observed that the coin was a foreign one, & took it back to pltf.'s friend, who gave him a half-sovereign instead of it, & the barman thereupon gave him the change. Pltf. & his friend then left the house. A person who was acting as manager at the bar in the absence of deft. followed them into the street, & gave them into the custody of a policeman on a charge of attempting to pass bad money:—Held: the manager had no implied authority by reason of his position to arrest pltf., inasmuch as his master's property was no longer in any danger, & the arrest was made only for the purpose of vindicating the law by punishing pltf. for a criminal offence which he was supposed to have already committed.—*ABRAHAM v. While pltf. was superintending the operation of bringing mineral waters into the cellar, the manager, acting under the mistaken impression that whisky was being removed from the cellar, sent for a policeman & gave pltf. into custody on a charge of stealing whisky. Before reaching the police station the manager admitted that he had made a mistake, & on arrival at the police station pltf. was released by the inspector:—Held: there was no evidence that the manager had an implied authority from deft. to give pltf. into custody, the act not being reasonably necessary for the protection of his master's property.—HANSON v. Deft., having previously received from the police a notice of articles recently stolen, amongst which was "a gold horse-shoe pin, set with seven diamonds," & a ring, gave pltf. into custody of a constable under sect. 34 of the above Act, on suspicion that the articles were stolen. It was afterwards proved that the articles in the possession of pltf. had not been stolen, & that his statements were true. In an action by him for false imprisonment the judge left the question whether deft. had a reasonable suspicion to the jury, who found their verdict for pltf.:—Held: (1) the question arising under the Act whether deft. reasonably suspected that the pin had been stolen or otherwise illegally or clandestinely obtained was for the judge; (2) there was no evidence of absence of reasonable suspicion in the mind of deft., & therefore judgment should be entered for him.—*HOWARD v. The 148th sect. enacted that it should be lawful for the company to make orders & regulations for regulating the travelling upon & use of the railway, & for or relating to travellers upon the line: such orders & regulations to be binding upon travellers & passengers passing upon the railway, upon pain of forfeiting & paying a sum not exceeding £5. Sect. 165 enacted that it should be lawful for any officer or agent of the co. to seize & detain any person whose name & residence should be unknown to such officer or agent, who should commit any offence against the act, & to convey him, etc., before a judge without any warrant or other authority than that act. The co. made a bye-law whereby a passenger not producing or delivering up his ticket was to be required to pay the fare from the place where the train originally started:—Held: this was not a bye-law imposing a penalty or forfeiture; & the arrest of a passenger not producing his ticket & refusing to pay the fare from the place where the train originally started was illegal.

1636. Arrest by special constable of railway company—Special Act.—Pltfs. were arrested outside the premises of deft. co. by a special constable appointed under Metropolitan District Railway Act, 1900 (c. clxxiii.), on a charge of having stolen copper & lead belonging to the co., & were prosecuted by the co. & acquitted. In the course of the trial of an action for false imprisonment & malicious prosecution in county ct., pltfs. put in evidence the deposition taken before the magistrate upon which they were committed for trial, & upon the deposition there was evidence that certain copper & lead which was found in pltfs.' possession at the time of their arrest was similar to that used by the railway co. There was, however, no admission on the part of the pltfs. that a felony had been committed, & there was no finding to that effect as the case had never gone to the jury. As the result of the trial in the county ct. the judge non-suited pltfs., holding that there was reasonable & probable cause for the arrest & prosecution of pltfs.:—Held: (DARLING, J.), there being no finding or admission that a felony had been committed, the special constable was not protected by sect. 55 (2) of the above Act.—KING & KING v. METROPOLITAN DISTRICT RY. CO. (1908), 99 L. T. 278; 72 J. P. 294, D. C.

1638. "Immediate apprehension."—A party using unreasonable violence to beat off a dog which runs at him is guilty of a wilful trespass under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 24. If he is seen committing the act, & a constable is immediately sent for, who follows him, he having quitted the place, & apprehends him at the distance of a mile, this is an immediate apprehension of a person "found committing" an offence under sect. 28 of the above Act.—*HANWAY v. A. returned home at 3 p.m., & was informed that the butler had paid for the article, & believing, although erroneously, that he himself had paid B. for it at the time of the purchase, immediately sent for a policeman, & ordered him to arrest B. on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences. The policeman & A.'s butler at once went in pursuit of B., & apprehended him at 10 p.m. In an action by B. against A. for wrongful arrest:—Held: B. was "found committing the offence," if at all, at 1 p.m., & the pursuit not having been commenced till A.'s return at 3 p.m., A. could not have believed he was immediately apprehending B. in pursuance of Larceny Act, 1861 (c. 96), s. 103.—*DOWNING v. Semble: though, as a general rule, the statute would not apply to a case of embezzlement, it being an act more of the mind than anything else, still it would apply where the person was found doing the act itself.—FIELD v. MUSGROVE (1867), 16 L. T. 536.

Prisoner escaped. The constable called prosecutor to his assistance, & together they endeavoured to take prisoner, who thereupon stabbed prosecutor:—Held: A conviction for feloniously cutting & maiming was wrong, on the ground that the arrest was not on fresh pursuit.—*R. v. The coachman immediately drove rapidly off. A police constable was told of what had occurred, & his attention was called to deft. & his burden. He followed, but came up only after deft. had entered his own house, when the constable arrested him:—Held: the conviction of deft. by a magistrate under Metropolitan Police Cts. On an application to a justice of the peace for a search warrant the sworn information upon which the application was made stated that the informant "hath just & reasonable cause to suspect & doth suspect that J. has in his possession certain property belonging to" the informant, "& that he has requested J. to allow him to search several boxes which J. has had packed ready to be taken away, & which he refuses to be looked through." The justice issued his warrant, which was executed:—Held: it was not necessary in such an information to allege that a larceny had in fact been committed, but it was enough to allege a suspicion that a larceny had been committed. It was not necessary to specify in the information the particular goods for which a search is desired. The information in question substantially averred that the informant suspected certain property of his to have been stolen, & it was sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction.—*JONES v. 1706. — Witnesses must be apprised of charge under inquiry.—Where pltf. was committed by a justice "for refusing to give evidence before him, touching a certain riot & disturbance," without showing that there had been a person charged before the justices, & that pltf. was apprised of the existence of such charge, with respect to which he was required to be examined as a witness :—Held : the warrant of commitment was no justification of the magistrate in an action of trespass.

Before a party can be brought into contempt for refusing to give evidence before a magistrate, he ought to be fully apprised that there is some information or charge for an offence then under inquiry before the justice (HOLROYD, J.).—CROPPER v. HORTON (1826), 8 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 166 ; 4 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 42.

1707. ——J.—A magistrate issued a warrant, reciting that, on complaint on oath before him of a misdemeanour, pltf. was stated to be a material witness ; that the magistrate had issued a summons requiring pltf. to appear to testify his knowledge ; that the summons was proved before the magistrate to have been duly served, but pltf. did not appear to testify & said that he would not ; & that it was necessary for the ends of justice that pltf. should appear at the next assizes to testify. The warrant then commanded the constable to bring pltf. before the magistrate, or some other justice, to find sufficient bail to appear & give evidence at the next assizes & testify :—Held : the warrant was bad for requiring pltf. to give bail at this stage of the proceedings, assuming that the magistrate had power to bring him up by warrant to give testimony.

I throw no doubt on the power of the magistrate to do all that is necessary to compel the attendance of those witnesses, whom he knows to be material. Here, if the warrant had merely recited the refusal of the witness to attend, & directed the constable to bring him, there might not be much doubt that it would have been justifiable (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—*EVANS v. 1708. Representation of accused by solicitor—Right of solicitor to cross-examine.—Certain justices at a preliminary inquiry into an alleged case of highway robbery declined to permit the solr. representing prisoners to cross-examine witnesses for the prosecution, believing that they possessed a discretionary power in the matter :—Held : justices had no discretion to prohibit the solr. to prisoners from cross-examining witnesses for the prosecution, & the right to cross-examine is absolute both under the Summary Jurisdiction

p. Under 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 10—Applies to materials for manufacture—Not manufactured goods.—A warrant granted under the above sect. to search for manufactured goods suspected to have been purloined or embezzled & apprehend the person in whose possession they might be found, is not competent, the statute giving this power only in regard to materials for manufacture. By the above sect. it is lawful for two justices upon complaint made by oath by one credible person that purloined or embezzled materials were concealed in any dwelling-house, etc., to grant a warrant for its being searched.—*BARNET v. t. — — — J.—Deft. having been unlawfully arrested on a charge of vagrancy by reason of there being no warrant, appeared, without protest, before a magistrate who dismissed the charge. Prior to its dismissal, a further charge of having opium in his possession, contrary to Opium & Drug Act, s. 3, was preferred against deft., upon which he was convicted. On the hearing of the latter charge, accused objected to the jurisdiction of the magistrate on the ground that his arrest without a warrant was illegal :—Held : deft., not having objected to the illegality of the warrant upon which he was arrested upon the charge of vagrancy when tried upon that charge, could not raise it on the second charge.—R. v. HURST (1914), 30 W. L. R. 176 ; 7 W. W. R. 994 ; 20 D. L. R. 129 ; 23 Can. Crim. Cas. 339.—CAN.

1710. — On cross-examination of witness for prosecution—Absence of caution.]—On an examination on a charge of felony before a magistrate, prisoner was asked if he wished to put any question to a witness against him. Instead of asking anything, he made a statement, which was written down on the depositions, but not signed by prisoner, who had received no caution:—Held: this statement was not evidence per se, but any one who heard prisoner make it might give evidence of it. But in such a case a prisoner ought to be told that that was not the proper time for him to make a statement.—R. v. WATSON (1851), 3 Car. & Kir. 111.

1711. — Caution to be used by justices.]—A prisoner ought to be told by the magistrate that, if he makes any statement, it may be used as evidence against him, & that he must not expect any favour if he confesses; but the magistrate ought not to dissuade him from confessing.—R. v. GREEN (1832), 5 C. & P. 312; 1 Nev. & M. M. C. 361.

1712. — —.]—When a prisoner is willing to make a statement, it is the duty of magistrates to receive it, but magistrates, before they do so, ought entirely to get rid of any impression that may have before been on prisoner's mind, that the statement may be used for his own benefit; & prisoner ought also to be told that what he thinks fit to say will be taken down, & may be used against him on his trial.

Nothing should be returned as a deposition, unless prisoner had an opportunity of knowing what was said, & an opportunity of cross-examining the person making the deposition.—R. v. ARNOLD (1838), 8 C. & P. 621.

b. — — Whether power to reduce charge.]—Justices of the peace, before whom a charge of "shooting & wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm" came on for preliminary hearing, changed it of their own motion to one of common assault & convicted & fined accused:—Held: the justices had no right to alter the charge to one of common assault.—*MILLER v. 1720. Object of depositions.]—Depositions are not taken for the purpose of affording information

1718 i. — Evidence of accused.]—Def. was charged by his wife, before a magistrate, with refusing to provide necessary clothing & lodging for herself & children. At the close of the case for the prosecution, deft. was tendered as a witness on his own behalf. The magistrate refused to hear his evidence, & without further evidence, committed him for trial:—Held: deft.'s evidence should have been taken for the defence.—R. v. MEYER (1886), 11 P. R. 477.—CAN.

f. Duty of justices—Prior to commitment for trial.]—The duty of a committing magistrate is to ascertain whether by the evidence for the prosecution a prima facie case is made out against an accused.—R. v. MAHA SINGH (1871), 3 N. W. 27; 14 W. L. R. 16.—IND.

PART V. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.

1720 i. Object of depositions.]—The object of taking depositions is not to to prisoner. The object of taking the depositions is, that if any of the witnesses, whose evidence is given before the magistrates, should be unable to attend at the trial, or die, there should not, by reason of this, be a failure of justice. That is the real ground on which the depositions are taken (CRESSWELL, J.).—R. v. WARD (1848), 2 Car. & Kir. 759.

Annotation :—Mentd. Dawes v. Hawkins (1860), 7 Jur. N. S. 262.

1721. Witness must be on oath.]—Where magistrates first took the examination of witnesses, not on oath, in support of a conviction, & afterwards swore them to the truth of their evidence, the ct. expressed its disapprobation of the practice.—R. v. KIDDY (1824), 4 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 734; 2 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 364.

1722. —.]—A deposition taken in an adjoining room to that in which the magistrates sit, by the magistrates' clerk, in the presence of prisoners, the witness not being sworn, & afterwards read over to the witness before the magistrates, in the presence of prisoners, the witness being then sworn to the truth of his deposition, is admissible.—R. v. CALVERT (1848), 2 Cox, C. C. 491.

1723. Must be in presence of justices.]—On a charge of felony, the witnesses who make the depositions on which prisoner is committed should be examined in prisoner's presence, & he should hear all the questions put & answered; & if the magistrates' clerk, before the arrival of the magistrates & of prisoner, examine the witnesses & take down what they state, & when the magistrates & prisoner arrive the depositions so taken are read over to the witnesses in the presence of the magistrates & prisoner, & the latter be asked whether he has any question to put to any of them, this is wrong.—R. v. JOHNSON (1846), 2 Car. & Kir. 394; 7 L. T. O. S. 370.

1725. —.]—Prisoners being charged with felony before a magistrate, minutes of the examination & cross-examination of the witnesses were taken in writing under the inspection of the magistrate. These minutes were taken to the magistrate's office to T., who proceeded to draw up the depositions. The witnesses attended at the office, & T., in order to make the depositions complete, put questions to them, & inserted their answers in the depositions. Neither the magistrate nor prisoners were present at the office. The depositions having been so written out, the witnesses again appeared before the magistrate, & in the presence of prisoners were re-sworn, & the depositions were read over to them, & a full opportunity was given for cross-examination before the depositions were signed by the witnesses :—Held : counsel for prisoners was entitled, without putting in the depositions, to ask a witness whether he had not made a certain statement to T., in answer to a question put by the latter in the course of writing the depositions, although, according to the evidence, the answer would have appeared in the depositions.—R. v. CHRISTOPHER, SMITH & THORNTON (1850), 2 Car. & Kir. 994; 1 Den. 536; T. & M. 225; 4 New Mag. Cas. 61; 4 New Sess. Cas. 139; 19 L. J. M. C. 103; 14 J. P. 83; 14 Jur. 203; 4 Cox, C. C. 76, C. C. R.

1726. — May be written by justice's clerk.]—At the hearing of a charge of felony the witnesses were examined & cross-examined by an attorney for prisoner in the presence of the magistrate, & a note was made of the heads of what they could each prove. Witnesses & prisoner were then taken into another room, & the witnesses were there, in the absence of the magistrate, examined by a clerk, & their answers taken in writing by him, & their signatures obtained to the paper, after which the witnesses & prisoner were again brought before the magistrate, & the evidence so taken was read over. Prisoner was then cautioned by the magistrate, & having previously made a statement, signed it, & the magistrate then signed the paper :—Held : this course of taking the depositions was irregular, & a deposition so taken was inadmissible in evidence.—

I do not suppose it necessary for the magistrate himself to write down the answers (MARTIN, B.).—R. v. WATTS (1863), Le. & Ca. 339; 3 New Rep. 175; 33 L. J. M. C. 63; 9 L. T. 453; 27 J. P. 821; 12 W. R. 112; 9 Cox, C. C. 395, C. C. R.

g. Witness must be on oath—Necessity for presence of accused.]—Prisoner having been arrested on a charge of poisoning P., a magistrate, the prisoner being kept in custody outside, first took down in writing the deposition of P., & then swore him to the truth of it. Prisoner being then brought into the room, the magistrate slowly read over the deposition to P., & asked him if it was true, & having been answered in the affirmative, he then re-swore P. to his deposition in the presence of prisoner, & read over the information to P., to him. Dependent having died, the entire document was read in evidence on the part of the Crown at the trial of the prisoner :—Held : the evidence was inadmissible both because the information was originally taken down without an oath having been previously administered to the informant, & also because prisoner was not present from the commencement.—R. v. WALSH (1850), 5 Cox, C. C. 115.—IR.

1723 i. Must be in presence of justices.]—Depositions taken at a preliminary inquiry, in the absence of the magistrate before whom the case is proceeding, have no legal value whatever; & the commitment by the magistrate of a prisoner for trial, the bill of indictment founded on his illegal commitment or on the illegal depositions & the true bill & indictment reported by the grand jury are null & void.—*R. v. 1723 ii. —.]—The declaration of a party since deceased was taken by way of precognition by a person not a magistrate, without witnesses, & when the party was not in apprehension of death :—Held : an inadmissible article of evidence, although it had been subsequently read over to deponent & attested by her in the presence of a magistrate.—Re M'INTOSH (1838), 2 Swin. 103.—SCOT.

h. Should be taken down in writing.]—Although the depositions or a substantial summary of the depositions of witnesses examined in a summary trial must be taken down in writing, duly authenticated & placed in the record, this is not so essential a part of the proceedings that it cannot be waived by the accused, it being a matter of procedure only capable of being dispensed with.—*R. v. 1727 i. Necessity for presence of accused—Opportunity for cross-examination.]—At a preliminary inquiry before a magistrate on a charge of indecent assault on a female, the latter's depositions were taken, prisoner being represented by counsel, but before her cross-examination was concluded the proceedings were adjourned to a fixed date on account of her illness. On the day to which adjournment had been made, the magistrate went out to the residence of the witness, & obtained her signature to her depositions as already taken, neither prisoner nor his counsel being present, & afterwards resumed the inquiry at his own office, prisoner being present, but not the witness, & on the evidence already taken prisoner was committed for trial. At the trial the witness was proved to be too ill to attend, & her depositions taken as above were tendered by the Crown & admitted :—Held : in view of Criminal Code, s. 687, the depositions were improperly received in evidence, prisoner's counsel not ever having had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness.—*R. v. 1784. First hearing abortive—Procedure at rehearing.—Several persons having been charged with conspiracy to defraud, a summons was issued, & the hearing commenced before a magistrate. When the inquiry had lasted a considerable time, & the evidence of a large number of witnesses had been taken, the magistrate fell ill & was unable to continue the hearing, which had to be recommenced before another magistrate. At the commencement of the rehearing counsel for the prosecution proposed to recall some of the witnesses called at the first hearing; to reswear them; to read to them their depositions taken at that hearing, directing them to correct the evidence if & where it was inaccurate; to ask them any additional questions that might be thought advisable; then to tender these witnesses for cross-examination, with liberty for the prosecution to re-examine where necessary; & then to proceed with the oral examination of those witnesses whom the prosecution intended to call but had not called on the first hearing:—Held: there was nothing illegal in the course proposed, & to accede to the proposal, if he thought it expedient in the interests of justice so to do, was within the discretion of the magistrate, with which the ct. would not interfere.—*Ex p. The day after the wounding took place, prisoner not being present, a constable took down M.'s statement in writing before a justice, & she signed & swore to it. On Oct. 18, prisoner then being present with others, the statement was read over to M., & accused was told he might ask questions. M. was then re-sworn & said the statement was true. 1739. Fresh caption for each day's hearing—Order of depositions.]—A private prosecutor not having the privilege that a police constable possesses of imprisoning a person on mere suspicion that a felony has been committed, false imprisonment results if the person is detained by the private prosecutor. Arrest, however, by a police constable which follows the placing of the case in his hands to do his duty is not an arrest by a private prosecutor, but is an arrest by the police constable.

The fact that a person is not actually aware that he is being imprisoned does not amount to evidence that he is not imprisoned, it being possible for a person to be imprisoned in law without his being conscious of the fact & appreciating the position in which he is placed, laying hands upon the person of the party imprisoned not being essential. The depositions of witnesses taken in pursuance of Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (c. 42), s. 17, in the form set forth in the sched. to that Act should appear in chronological order, a record of the depositions being kept day by day with a fresh caption at the beginning of each day's proceedings showing what witnesses have been examined on that day, & what part of their evidence has been given on that day.—*MEERING v. E. Deposition of Witness who is Dangerously ill.

1763. Procedure under Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (c. 35), s. 6—Duty of justices—By whom depositions to be taken.]—A magistrate, before whom a person charged with an indictable offence is brought, is bound under Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (c. 42), s. 17, to go to the residence of a witness who is so dangerously ill that he is unable to appear in ct. in order to take the deposition of the witness in the presence of accused, provided that it is practicable & permissible for him to do so. The question whether or not it is practicable for the magistrate to take the deposition must be decided by the magistrate in his discretion, which he must exercise in a judicial manner. This obligation exists whenever a person is charged with any indictable offence, & not merely in cases of murder or manslaughter, & does not depend on whether the magistrate is asked by a superior officer of the police to take the deposition. If it is not practicable to take the deposition application may be made under sect. 6 of the 1867 Act to another justice to take the deposition.—R. v. Bros, Ex p. HARDY, [1911] 1 K. B. 159; 80 L. J. K. B. 147; 103 L. T. 728; 74 J. P. 483; 27 T. L. R. 41; 55 Sol. Jo. 47; 22 Cox, C. C. 352, D. C.

1764. — Notice to accused essential.]—Q. was charged on an indictment with the wilful murder of D. D. was taken to hospital &, having been told by the medical attendant that he thought there were little hopes of her living, & that he thought she was going to die, & she herself saying,

"I know I shall never get better; what will become of my poor children"; made a statement which was taken down in writing in the presence of the magistrate. At the trial it was proposed on behalf of the prosecution to give this statement in evidence under sect. 6 of the above Act:—Held: the proviso at the end of the sect. overrode the whole sect. & the statement could not be read in evidence without proof of notice having been given to the accused, before it was taken, & that statute could have no operation in the case of a deposition taken while accused was keeping out of the way, as the notice was required to be given to accused before the taking of the statement, & not simply before the reading of it.—R. v. QUIGLEY (1868), 18 L. T. 211, N. P.

1765. — — Notice must be in writing.]—The notice intended by sect. 6 of the above Act is a notice in writing, & a statement on oath or affirmation by a person dangerously ill is inadmissible against a prisoner where he has only had oral notice of the intention to take the same, although he was present when the statement was taken.—R. v. SHURMER (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 323; 55 L. J. M. C. 155; 55 L. T. 126; 50 J. P. 743; 34 W. R. 656; 2 T. L. R. 737; 16 Cox, C. C. 94, C. C. R.

The woman's deposition was then taken in the presence of prisoner, a justice of the peace, & a clerk of the justices, but no notice in writing had been served upon prisoner of the intention to take the evidence. The woman subsequently died, & at the trial of prisoner for murder it was sought to put the deposition of deceased in evidence under the above Act or, alternatively, under Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (c. 42):—Held: the deposition was not admissible in evidence under the 1867 Act, because no notice in writing of the intention to take the evidence had been served upon prisoner, nor under the 1848 Act as prisoner had not had a full opportunity of cross-examining deceased.—*R. v. 1769. — Necessity for signature of witness.]—A deposition of a woman who subsequently died was taken by a magistrate at a hospital. At the time the deposition was taken, it was intended that it should be taken in accordance with the provisions of sect. 6 of the above Act. Accused was present & had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness. The deposition was read over to the witness & she assented to it as correct, but she did not sign it as her hands had been seriously burnt & were covered with bandages.

The statement of a person dangerously ill & not likely to recover taken by a justice with due observance of Justices Act, 1902, ss. 111, 112, is not rendered inadmissible in evidence by the fact that it has been taken in a narrative form instead of in the form of question & answer, & that it has been put in as a dying deposition.—*R. v. The deposition of the witness was then taken in the form prescribed by Justices Act. Subsequently accused was committed for trial on the offence charged before the same justice:—Held: the deposition was taken on a preliminary or other investigation within the meaning of Justices Act,

1772. — Effect of non-compliance—Cross-examination of prisoner.]—Upon an indictment for murder, a statement made by deceased, in the presence of prisoner, was held to be inadmissible as a dying deposition, on the grounds that the above Act had not been complied with. The statement was not admissible as a dying declaration. Prisoner was called in his own defence:—Held: though the whole matter of the statement might be put to prisoner in cross-examination, it was better in such a serious case to limit this part of the cross-examination as to questions then put by prisoner relating to the defence now set up by him.—*R. v. 1802. Of prosecutor—Who is prosecutor.]—A person of the age of sixteen is competent to enter into a recognisance conditioned to prosecute on a criminal charge, & if it be forfeited & estreated, the ct. will not discharge it, unless a sufficient case for relief be made out.—Ex p. WILLIAMS (1824), M'Cle. 493.

1803. — — —.]—In a case of manslaughter, the father of deceased retained an attorney to prosecute the person charged. In pursuance of this retainer, the attorney prepared & delivered briefs to counsel at the assizes, with instructions to conduct the prosecution. A constable had been bound over by recognisance to prosecute, & the solr. for the police, in pursuance of general orders given to him by the constabulary committee, prepared & delivered a brief to counsel:—Held: the ct. had no power to order that the attorney who has been retained by the father should be allowed the costs of preparing briefs, etc.—*R. v. 1800 i. Committal should be for offence disclosed.]—Warrant of commitment must show the offence with which prisoner is charged.—R. v. STOCKDALE (1863), 1 Q. S. C. R. 110.—AUS.

e. Lapse of warrant of commitment by postponement.]—Applt. was extradited to Canada on account of stealing a large sum of money from the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster. He had preliminary hearing before the magistrate & was committed, in Sept., to the gaol at New West-due the an appln. was made to the presiding judge regarding the position taken by ~~the~~ <sup>he</sup> did not propose to prefer a bill of indictment to the grand jury against accused at said assizes. On this appln. it was contended by the Crown that in effect an order was made by the judge traversing the case to the next assizes. This was disputed on behalf of accused. The present application was for the discharge of accused on the ground that the warrant of commitment lapsed at the end of the assizes, & that the Crown had obtained no traverse of the proceedings to the next assizes:—Held: the warrant of commitment was still valid & subsisting, & the only application which prisoner could make in the circumstances was for an order to be released

1809. — Whether necessary — Prosecution for libel.]—In a prosecution at the Central Criminal Ct. for publishing a libel, it is not necessary, for the purpose of giving jurisdiction, that prosecutor should have entered into recognisance, or that deft. should have been in custody or be bound to appear, according to Central Criminal Ct. Act, 1834 (c. 36), s. 13.—R. v. GREGORY (1845), 7 Q. B. 274; 14 L. J. M. C. 82; 5 L. T. O. S. 149; 9 Jur. 593; 1 Cox, C. C. 198; 9 J. P. Jo. 293; 115 E. R. 492.

1810. Practice in taking recognisances—Effect of irregularity.]—The usual practice in taking the recognisance of a person convicted at quarter sessions is that the person so convicted, before he is allowed to leave the ct. enters orally into the recognisance before the officer of the ct. who makes a minute of it, & the recognisance is not formally drawn up till afterwards.

J. had been convicted at the sessions, & was sentenced, inter alia, to enter into her recognisance in a certain amount. She swore that after sentence she went into an outer office, where a clerk took a note of her entering into the recognisance. She, on a subsequent day, attended at the clerk of the justices' room at the sessions house, & the clerk in attendance wrote something in a book. That was all that was done. The recognisance was subsequently estreated, & an application had been made to reduce it in vain:—Held: no good cause had been shown to set aside the recognisance as having been irregularly taken.—Ex p. JEFFREYS (1888), 52 J. P. 280, D. C.

Part VI.—Indictments.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1811. Definition.]—An indictment is a written accusation of one or more persons of a crime presented upon oath by a jury of twelve or more men, termed a grand jury (DENMAN, J.).—R. v. SLATOR (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 267; 51 L. J. Q. B. 246; 46 J. P. 694; 30 W. R. 410.

1812. Construction of indictments.]—Every indictment must contain a complete description of such facts & circumstances as constitute the crime, without inconsistency or repugnancy. But except in certain cases where technical expressions, having grown by long use into law, are required to be used, the same sense is to be put on the words of an indictment which they bear in ordinary acceptation. If the sense of any word be in ordinary acceptation ambiguous, it shall be construed according as the context & subject-matter require it to be in order to make the whole consistent & sensible. The word "until" may therefore be construed either exclusive or inclusive of the day to which it is applied, according to the context & subject-matter.—R. v. STEVENS & AGNEW (1804), 5 East, 244; 1 Smith, K. B. 437; 102 E. R. 1063.

Annotations:—Reid. R. v. O'Connell (1844), 3 L. T. O. S. 323; Douglas v. R. (1847), 13 Q. B. 74; R. v. Duffy (1849), 7 State Tr. N. S. 795. Mentd. Wilkinson v. Gaston (1846), 9 Q. B. 137; Bellhouse v. Mellor, Proudman v. Mellor (1859), 4 H. & N. 116.

1813. —.]—An indictment in the first count

charged A. with stealing a promissory note from the person of B., in the second count with stealing a bank note from the person of B., in the third count with receiving the aforesaid goods "so as aforesaid feloniously stolen." A. was acquitted on the two first counts, & convicted on the last:—Held: after verdict the indictment was not bad on the ground of repugnancy because the words of reference in the third count did not necessarily import a stealing of the goods by A.; if they did, that count did not thereby become intrinsically repugnant, but was conceivably capable of proof; & after verdict the ct. would resort to any possible construction which would uphold the indictment against a purely technical objection.—R. v. CRADDOCK (1850), 2 Den. 31; T. & M. 361; 4 New Sess. Cas. 400; 20 L. J. M. C. 31; 16 L. T. O. S. 514; 15 J. P. 20; 14 Jur. 1031; 4 Cox, C. C. 409, C. C. R.

provides a complete procedure respecting recognisances & any other procedure, such as the English Crown Office Rules, would be inconsistent therewith.—R. v. ZARKAS et al., [1918] 1 W. W. R. 323; 11 Saak, L. R. 51; 29 Can. Crim. Cas. 183; 39 D. L. R. 776.—CAN.

h. — Outside justice's own county.]—The taking of a recognisance by a justice under Grand Jury (Ireland) Act, 1836, s. 137 (as adapted), where the offender is unknown, does not involve the exercise of judicial functions. Such an act, being merely ministerial, may be done by a justice outside the county in which he has jurisdiction.—FLOOD v. DUBLIN COUNTY COUNCIL (1907), 41 L. T. L. 120.—IR.

k. Several sureties bound in unequal amounts—Relative liability.]—Sureties in a recognisance contribute in proportion to the amounts for which

l. Several accused—May be sureties each for the other.]—Where on a joint complaint, two accused persons are tried separately & convicted separately, although the convictions are embodied in one document, accused may, on appeal, enter into recognisances as sureties each for the other.—R. v. CYR & CALVEZ, [1923] 3 W. W. R. 699.—CAN.

m. Application for relief from recognisance—Excuse.]—An application to be relieved from a recognisance to appear felony was refused; the only excuse for non-attendance being that the party was in ill-health, & expected to be sent for by the Crown officer.—R. v. GEROW (1863), 5 All. 633.—CAN.

PART VI. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.—A.

1814 i. Where act prohibited or enjoined by statute.]—An information was laid against deft. before a police magistrate, under Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, s. 193 (1) (b), for having fraudulently put into a ballot box a ballot paper purporting to have been used by a person who did not vote at the election. There is no provision in the section, nor elsewhere in the Act, indicating the procedure to be followed.—Held: the offence charged was not an offence at common law, & was punishable by indictment.—R. v. DUROCHER (1913), 28 O. L. R. 499; 4 O. W. N. 1057.—CAN.

1814 ii. —.]—A prosecution for constructing a new weir across a salmon river in violation of the provisions of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 106, s. 63, as no penalty is attached, is the subject of indictment

1815. —[.]—An indictment lies against a person for doing what is prohibited by statute, if no particular mode of punishment be directed.—HOLLINGWORTH'S CASE (1620), Cro. Jac. 577; 79 E. R. 493.

PART VI. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.

a. Who may prefer indictment — Barrister appointed by A.-G.]—By statute there is imposed upon the A.-G. the duty of appointing some Queen's counsel, or other competent barrister of the ct., to attend the criminal business of each sittings of the Supreme Ct., in each county in the province: such authority to be conveyed by written instructions under the hand of the A.-G., the presentment of which, to the presiding judge, in the absence of the A.-G., is made sufficient authority for any barrister to take charge, on behalf of the Crown, of criminal business, & conduct the trial of criminals at any sittings or term:—Held: these words were sufficient to cover the specific act of preferring an indictment, but the A.-G. must direct the preferring of the bill in the particular case, & it will not do to direct the counsel to prepare bills in all cases which may arise.—R. v. TOWNSEND & WHITING (1896), 28 N. S. R. 468.—CAN.

b. ———.]—Deft. was committed for trial on a charge of assaulting, wounding, & doing grievous bodily harm to W., who was bound over in regular form to prosecute. At the next term of the Supreme Ct. the grand jury found an indictment against deft. W. was not present, & was not examined as a witness. The A.-G. was not present, & no one had any special directions from him to prefer an indictment. No one had the written consent of a judge, & no order of ct. was made to prefer an indictment. The point was reserved whether the indictment should not be quashed, because it was not preferred by any of the persons authorised by Criminal Code, s. 641. Under an Act of the Provincial Legislature, crimes such as that for which deft. was indicted, are prosecuted by an officer appointed by the A.-G. at each term of the ct., or, in default of such appointment, by the ct.:—Held: in these circumstances the presence of the prosecutor was not necessary, & no special direction from the A.-G., or written consent of a judge, or order of the ct., was necessary to make the indictment valid.—R. v. HAMILTON (1898), 30 N. S. R. 322.—CAN.

e. Leave to prefer—When refused.]—Leave to prefer an indictment may properly be refused the Crown when the accused has been discharged on a habeas corpus reviewing a magistrate's commitment for trial in respect of the same charge & holding the evidence insufficient on the merits to justify a commitment for trial.—R. v. MACKAY (1918), 29 Can. Crim. Cas. 419.—CAN.

f. ——— Opposed by A.-G.]—Where the Crown declined to lay any charge against one committed for trial upon an information for criminal libel & also opposed an appln. by the private prosecutor for consent as the ct. under sect. 873A to lay a charge the ct. refused its consent as the Crown could, notwithstanding such consent & laying of the charge, stop all proceedings.—R. v. EDWARDS (1919), 2 W. W. R. 600.—CAN.

g. Charge entirely different from that on which prisoner committed.]—A prisoner may at his trial be charged in the presentment with an offence entirely different from that for which he is committed for trial.—R. v. MARTIN (1884), 10 V. L. R. 343.—AUS.

h. ———.]—Prisoners were committed for trial on a charge of gambling in a railway train. On the trial, an indictment was preferred, under 42 Vict. c. 44, s. 3 (D), for obtaining money by false pretences. The prisoners' counsel objected to the prisoners being tried on a different charge from that on which they had been committed. The objection was overruled, & the charge read over to prisoners, & on its being explained that they could be tried forthwith or remain in custody until the next sitting of oyer & terminer, they pleaded not guilty, & said that they were ready for trial. The

for the same alleged offence:—Held: a rule to show cause would be refused.—R. v. STOCKLEY (1842), 3 Q. B. 238; 2 Gal. & Dav. 728; 11 L. J. M. C. 105; 6 J. P. 552; 114 E. R. 498.

BRETTEL* (1842), Car. & M. 609.

1909. ——— Where transaction consists of distinct acts.]—A. was indicted for shooting at B., a gamekeeper. There being another indictment against A. for night poaching:—Held: although both indictments related to the same transaction, yet the offences were quite distinct from each other, & prosecutor, therefore, ought not to be put to his election to go upon one indictment & abandon the other.—R. v. HANDLEY (1833), 5 C. & P. 565.

Found at quarter sessions & at assizes—Indictment at quarter sessions not transmitted to assizes.]—An indictment was found at the county sessions at B. against deft. for obstructing a highway. Upon the certificate of such finding, deft. was taken before a magistrate & bound by recognisance to appear & plead at assizes. The indictment was not transmitted to assizes, but was in the custody of the clerk of the peace:—Held: the judge of assize had no power to order the clerk of the peace to send the indictment to assizes; as it was found at sessions, & not transmitted for trial at the assizes, the ct. had no jurisdiction to try the same.

A second indictment for the same offence being found by the grand jury at the assizes:—Held:

prisoners were convicted; no question having been raised as to their having been tried without their consent, although their counsel took other objections to the proceedings. A writ of habeas corpus having been issued, & the prisoners' discharge moved for, on the ground of the absence of such consent:—Held: the motion must be refused.—R. v. GOODMAN (1883), 2 O. R. 468.—CAN.

k. Adding count to indictment—No previous hearing before magistrate of matter in new count.]—Accused was tried upon an indictment containing two counts, the first for theft, & the second for obtaining money under false pretences. The accused was committed for trial only on the charge contained in the first count, the charge contained in the second count having been withdrawn:—Held: the judge had the right, under the Criminal Code, as amended in 1909, to add the second count:—Held: also, accused had elected to be tried by the judge on both charges.—R. v. STICKLER (1910), 13 W. L. R. 316.—CAN.

l. ———.]—Deft. was charged with stealing from his employer. Upon his trial, under the speedy trials provisions of the Criminal Code, a count was added to the original charge to the effect that deft., a clerk in the service of C., with intent to defraud, "omitted particulars from books of account belonging to & in the possession of his employer" & was, therefore, guilty of an indictable offence. The judge quashed the original indict. & allowed the Crown to proceed upon the added count, & convicted deft. Upon a case deft., being bound to appear by recognisance, must be called upon to plead to the second indictment.—R. v. WILDMAN (1872), 12 Cox, C. C. 354.

1914. Information & indictment for same offence—Information discharged—Right to prefer indictment.]—Where a rule for a criminal information had been discharged on the payment of costs by deft.:—Held: from these circumstances no agreement was to be implied that prosecutor should not institute any other proceedings, & an indictment having been afterwards preferred by him for the same offence, the ct. would refuse to stay the proceedings under it.—R. v. STANSFIELD (1837), Will. Woll. & Dav. 147.

SUB-SECT. 2.—VEXATIOUS INDICTMENTS ACT, 1859.

1915. Application of statute—Every count must comply with provisions.]—An indictment contained two counts for obtaining money by false pretences on two several occasions, the requirements of the above Act having been complied with in respect of one of the cases only. The prisoner refused to plead; & a plea of not guilty was entered by the direction of the ct. Evidence was given upon each count, & the prisoner was convicted upon each:—Held: the second count ought to have been quashed, & therefore the conviction upon that count could not stand.—R. v. FUDGE (1864), Le. & Ca. 390; 3 New Rep.

stated:—Held: the pinning or annexing of the new count to the formal charge in writing signed by the counsel & agent for the A.-G., was sufficient to incorporate it in the charge.—R. v. WILSON (1913), 26 W. L. R. 148; 15 D. L. R. 168; 6 Sask. L. R. 348; 5 W. W. R. 620.—CAN.

m. ———.]—Semble: where, after an accused person has been committed for trial, the consent of a judge is asked ex parte, under Crimes Act, 1908, s. 407, to add a count to the indictment to be preferred against him, charging him with an offence not disclosed in the depositions & not investigated in the ct. below, the judge has jurisdiction to give such consent; but such jurisdiction should only be exercised upon sufficient prima facie evidence being placed before him.—R. v. O'KEEFE (1909), 23 N. Z. L. R. 502.—N.Z.

n. ——— Order should be made at commencement of trial.]—At the commencement of a trial before a ct. of session on a charge under Penal Code, s. 206, the Public Prosecutor applied to the ct. to frame new heads of charge under Code, ss. 423 & 424. The Sessions Judge postponed passing any final decision upon this application, until it became apparent that the charge under sect. 206 was not sustainable on the evidence to be adduced by the prosecution. After hearing the evidence for the prosecution on this charge, the judge, without going into the defence or recording the opinions of the assessors, passed an order of acquittal. At the same time, he rejected the application for framing new heads of charge, holding that he had no power to frame any new charges in addition to the original charge. He was also of opinion that the dismissal of a complaint, which the prosecutor had previously filed against the accused on the very charges which were sought to be added, was also a sufficient ground for rejecting the application:—Held: the judge ought to have finally disposed of the application for framing additional charges at the very commencement of the trial when it was made, especially because it did not purport to be based on any facts other than those contained in the depositions recorded by the committing magistrate.—R. v. VAJIRAM (1892), 1 L. R. 16 Bom. 414.—IND.

o. ——— At trial without jury—Election of accused.]—When an accused person elects to take his trial before a judge without a jury, on the charge upon which he was committed, or to answer which he was bound over to take his trial under Criminal Code, 1892, s. 601, leave should not be granted, under sect. 773, for the addition to the indictment of new or other charges for offences substantially different, unless the accused elect to be tried on such other charges also by a judge without a jury.—R. v. DOUGLAS (1906), 5 W. L. R. 6; 16 Man. L. R. 345.—CAN.

p. Alternative charge not laid.]—The fact that a person charged with an offence might, upon the facts, have been charged with a conspiracy with another, is no objection to the individual charge.—R. v. CLARK (1892), 2 B. C. R. 191.—CAN.

1928. ———. Accused not in custody.—Deft had been committed for conspiring with one B. to obtain property by false pretences. A warrant had been granted for the arrest of B., but he had not been arrested. The hearing at the police ct. took a considerable time, & in order to avoid the necessity of a second lengthy hearing at the police ct. in the event of B.'s arrest, leave was applied for, & granted, to prefer a bill of indictment against B. for conspiracy.—R. v. KOPELWITZ (1905), 69 J. P. 216.

1929. ———. Preferring indictment on fiat of Attorney-General—Committal of three for conspiracy—Indictment preferred against them & another accused.—Three defts. were severally bound by recognisance to appear at the next session of the Central Criminal Ct., & there surrendered themselves, & pleaded to such indictment as might be found against them for or in respect of the charge of conspiracy to cheat & defraud. Prosecutors were also bound over to appear at such next session, & to prefer or cause to be preferred a bill of indictment against the persons accused for the offence of conspiracy to cheat & defraud, & duly to prosecute such indictment & give evidence thereon. At the next session an indictment was preferred & found, & defts. surrendered; but in consequence of the absence of a material witness for the prosecution the trial was put off, & the recognisances duly respited until the next session. Before the next session the Solr. General directed an indictment for a conspiracy to be preferred against a fourth deft., C.; & a second indictment was preferred & found against them all, upon which the original defts. appeared, but refused to plead. A plea of not guilty was entered for them, & they were tried & found guilty and sentenced. On a writ of error:—Held: (1) it was not necessary that the indictment should aver that the conditions imposed by sect. 1 of the above Act (c. 17), had been performed, e.g., that it had been preferred by the direction or with the consent of a judge or of the A.-G. or Solr. General; (2) the indictment was preferred with proper authority, & the recognisances duly entered into, as the charge on which defts. were tried was the same as that to which the recognisances related; & those recognisances were not exhausted by the first indictment being preferred & defts. surrendering.—KNOWLTON v. No prosecutor was bound over to prefer an indictment. The prosecution subsequently obtained the fiat of the A.-G. directing the prosecution of the accused for the offences with which he had been charged as above:—Held: the prosecution had complied with the provisions of the Act, & the indictment was good.—R. v. ROGERS (1902), 66 J. P. 825.

SUB-SECT. 3.—ADDING COUNTS WITHOUT LEAVE OF COURT.

1932. If dependent upon facts appearing in depositions—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (c. 35), s. 1.—R. v. BELL, No. 1923, ante.

1933. ———. ]—Where accused summoned before justices in respect of an offence triable summarily, elects, under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 17, to be tried by a jury, the subsequent procedure before justices is the same as that which is applicable to the case of indictable offences, & not that applicable to summary proceedings. Accused may therefore be committed to take his trial in respect of any indictable offence disclosed by the depositions; & in cases not falling within Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (c. 17), or in which the operation of that Act is limited by Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (c. 35), s. 1, counts may be added to the indictment in respect of any indictable offence disclosed by the depositions, although accused was not summoned before the justices in respect of such offence.—*R. v. 1934. ———. Addition before indictment presented to grand jury.—It is not necessary to obtain the leave of the ct. under Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (c. 35), for the addition of counts for offences within Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (c. 17), if the facts on which the counts are founded appear on the depositions, before the indictment is presented to the grand jury.—*R. v. 1935. ———. No committal for further offence.—The indictments charged deft. with committing certain offences for which they had been committed for trial, & also charged them with committing a further offence for which they had not been committed for trial, although the depositions contained evidence of such further offence. The ct. refused to allow the prosecution to give evidence of such further offence, being of opinion that defts. would be improperly embarrassed if such charge were gone into then.—*R. v. Sect. 3.—Preferring an indictment: Sub-sects. 3 & 4.
Sect. 4: Sub-sect. 1.]

1936. ——. —].—A farmer was charged with an offence under Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 35), s. 5, upon J. H., a girl 15 years of age. On motion to quash the indictment, on the ground that the requirements of the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (c. 17), had not been complied with. The magistrates had committed the prisoner for trial on a charge of rape only. Accordingly, prosecutrix had never been bound over to prosecute on the present charge. The Vexatious Indictments Act constantly spoke of such offence & it was submitted that could only mean the offence for which he was ultimately indicted. No doubt the jury could convict of the offence under the Criminal Law Amendment Act on an indictment charging him only with rape; but that did not mean that in contemplation of law the minor offence formed part of the indictment. Objection overruled.—R. v. HARDCASTLE (1907), 71 J. P. Jo. 580.

1937. ——. —].—New counts for charges on which there has not been a committal for trial may be added to an indictment without the leave of the ct. of trial if those charges be founded on the evidence disclosed in the depositions, subject to such counts being disallowed by the ct. at the trial.

If on the submission by one deft. that there is no case to go to the jury, the ct. holds that there was a case, it will not interfere if the judge uses the subsequent evidence of defts. against that deft.—R. v. HOGAN (1922), 16 Cr. App. Rep. 182, C. C. A.

1938. ——. Effect of Grand Juries (Suspension) Act, 1917 (c. 4), s. 1 (2).].—The provision of sect. 1 (2) of the above Act that in certain cases an indictment may be presented without its having been found by a grand jury "but in other respects as heretofore," preserves the right, without the leave of the ct., to add counts to the indictment before presentation provided that they are founded on facts disclosed in the depositions.—*R. v. 1941. ——. Method of obtaining leave of court.].—Deft. B. with others was charged with having published alleged blasphemous libels on certain dates, in the F. newspaper. The fiat of the Director of Criminal Prosecutions had been obtained authorising the prosecution. The summons on which the defts. were charged specified the particular dates of the libels on which the prosecution relied. At the first hearing before the magistrates the alleged libels were not read out in ct., but counsel for the prosecution gave an undertaking to furnish both to the ct. & defts. particulars of the numbers of the newspaper & articles prosecuted. At the adjourned hearing deft. B. called the attention of the ct. to the fact that the particulars furnished in pursuance of the undertaking contained a reference to an alleged libel published in an earlier number of the same newspaper, but not included in the summons. Counsel for the prosecution then withdrew the number as not being in the summons. Defts. were committed for trial. Counsel for the prosecution subsequently applied ex p. to the Recorder of London under Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (c. 35), s. 1, to add two counts to the indictment based upon the alleged libel contained in the number withdrawn before the police magistrate; counsel for the prosecution did not state in his application that he had so withdrawn the said number of the newspaper. The recorder granted leave; the two counts were added, & the indictment sent up to the grand jury, who found a true bill against defts. in respect of the whole indictment. The indictment was removed by certiorari from the Central Criminal Ct. into the Q. B. Div. of the High Ct. Defts. then obtained a rule nisi, calling upon the prosecution to show cause why the two additional counts should not be quashed. On argument of the rule:—Held: the counts must be quashed on the ground that the leave of the ct. to add them was obtained on materials insufficient for the exercise of its discretion; & the obtaining of such leave in cases under Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (c. 17), & Acts amending it, was not a mere formality, but must conform to the spirit & intention of those Acts.—R. v. BRADLAUGH (1882), 47 L. T. 477; 47 J. P. 71; 31 W. R. 229; 15 Cox, C. C. 156, D. C.

1944. ——. —].—Where a magistrate has committed a deft. to take his trial on some allegations of perjury, & refused to commit on others, prosecutor cannot add counts to the indictment containing allegations on which the magistrate refused to commit unless he has been bound over to prosecute those charges.—R. v. CRABBE (1895), 59 J. P. 247.

1945. ——. —].—If a magistrate commits accused person for trial for offences within Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (c. 17), but refuses to commit him for trial on other such offence prosecution cannot add counts alleging the latter offences to the indictment. Prosecutd ought in such circumstances to be bound over to prosecute the offences on which the magistrate has refused to commit the accused for trial.

Deft. was arrested upon a warrant charging him with committing an offence within Bkpcy. Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 31. The solr. for the prosecution told the magistrate that the accused would be charged with committing other offences within this section, & also with obtaining money by false pretences. Evidence of the offences within Bkpcy. Act was then given. The solr. for the prosecution then said that he intended to call other witnesses, when the magistrate said that he did not consider it was necessary as he was going to commit the accused for trial for the offences under the Bkpcy. Act. No further evidence was called on the false pretence charges, & the magistrate was not asked to commit the accused for trial on these charges, nor did he express any opinion on them, & all the evidence on these charges was not before him. Deft. was indicted for the offences under the Bkpcy. Act & counts were added for obtaining money by false pretences:—Held: these latter counts must be quashed.—R. v. COYNE (1905), 69 J. P. 151.

PART VI. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 1.

t. General rule.—In an indictment each separate count must disclose a complete offence, & the allegations contained in one count cannot cover the insufficiency of the others. An offence created by statute must be drawn so as to meet all the requirements of that statute or it must be drawn in the very words used by the statute. The words "and the jurors aforesaid do further present" are indicative of a new presentment & of a distinct count from the preceding one.—R. v. SAMUELS (1888), 16 R. L. O. S. 576.—CAN.

s. Effect of saving clause.—Prisoners were indicted under Insolvent Act, 1869, s. 147, for having within three months preceding the execution of an assignment in insolvency pawned, pledged, & disposed of otherwise than in the way of trade, certain goods which had remained unpaid for during the three months.

By the Act of 1875, s. 149, the Act of 1869 was repealed, but there was a saving clause as regarded proceedings commenced & pending thereunder:—Held: the prosecution as well as the offence came within the saving clause.

W. were two of his christian names, but that he had other christian names which were unknown to the witnesses & were not proved. The jury found a verdict of guilty, & stated that they were satisfied with the evidence of the identity of the Duke :—Held : (1) the conviction was wrong, as matter of description in an indictment, though unnecessarily alleged, must be proved as laid ; (2) the ct. of quarter sessions were not bound to amend at the trial, but under Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (c. 100), s. 24, they might in their discretion have made an amendment by which the conviction would have been supported, by striking out all the christian names, which would have been a sufficient description, & an amendment by striking out only the two names which were not proved would have been wrong ; (3) all amendments should be made before a case goes to the jury, & it was now too late to amend.—*R. v. girl called M., her servant, her maiden name being unknown, of the age of eight years, did unlawfully & maliciously do grievous bodily harm to M., whereby her health was permanently injured. At the trial the indictment was amended by omitting the words “ then being mistress of ” & “ her servant, her maiden name being unknown,” & by adding after the name M. the name of V. in the three places where the name M. occurs. The trial proceeded on the indictment so amended, & prisoner was found guilty of common assault :—Held : the finding was legal.—R. v. BISSONETTE (1879), 2 L. N. 212 ; 23 L. C. J. 249.—CAN.

c. Description of rector.]—An indictment or sending to the Lord Lieutenant a false recommendation of persons convicted, charged that the prisoner forged the signature of “ T. King, Rector of T.” The evidence was, that the name forged by the

d. Same person differently described in different parts of indictment.]—In an indictment for subornation of perjury, the prosecutor was, in the first instance, styled M., merchant, afterwards M., esquire, without any averment connecting the one with the other, & showing that the person first named was one & the same with the person afterwards mentioned in the indictment. Error alleged on this ground disallowed, it being only necessary to charge the offence in the indictment in language sufficiently precise to show that the M. named in one part of the indictment was the 1997. —.]—Prisoner was charged in first count, that she in & upon a child born of her body & of the tender age of about two days, & not named, feloniously made an assault, & caused to take poison, & so murdered her. In second count, that she in & upon the child so born of her body & not named as aforesaid, feloniously did make an assault, & that she wilfully did cast the child upon a heap of ashes, & did then & there leave the child, in the open air, exposed to the cold air, of which said exposure & of the chilling thereby caused, the child then & there died :—Held : (1) there is a difference between an indictment which is bad for charging an act which as laid is no crime, & an indictment which is bad for charging a crime defectively. The latter may be aided by verdict. the former cannot ; (2) the description of the child in the second count was not incorporated by reference in the description given in the first count, viz., that it was of tender age, & the second count was defective in not showing that the child was able to take care of itself ; (3) if the act of the prisoner charged in that count was a nonfeasance, the indictment would have been bad after verdict, but as it was a misfeasance, & the death of the child was alleged to have been caused thereby, the defective statement in the indictment must be taken to be supplied by the verdict ; (4) “ Not named ” is a sufficient description of the child ; “ not baptised,” would be insufficient.

It is not averred that the child was of such tender years, or so feeble that she could not walk away, & take care of herself, but that is implied, for if she had been sufficiently old, or strong to do so, the death would not have arisen from the exposure by prisoner, but from the act of the child in not walking away & taking care of herself. The jury could not have found prisoner guilty, without actually negating the power of the child to take care of herself, & so to escape the consequences of the unlawful act of prisoner, & consequently after verdict that fact must be implied (per CUR.).—*R. v. 1. Where age material it should be stated—Sufficiency of statement.]—Where an act is a criminal offence only because the person injured is below the age of puberty the complaint ought to set forth distinctly the age of the person, & the mere addition of figures in brackets after the person's name is insufficient.—LOCKWOOD v. WALKER, [1910] S. C. (J.) 3.—SCOT.

Sect. 4.—Form of indictments: Sub-sects. 3, 4 & 5.] averred in the indictment:—Held: the indictment was not bad on the ground that the age of the girl was not averred.

Having regard to the provisions of Children Act, 1908 (c. 67), s. 123 (2), & sched. The indictment did not specify any date when the articles were alleged to have been stolen. Before trial objection was taken that the indictment ought to be quashed, as no such date was specified:—Held: it was not necessary to state any date in the indictment, though on the trial a date for the taking must be proved, & the prosecution might have been put to their election to say upon which three cases they intended to proceed.—*R. v. The time when two of the statutes were passed was inaccurately described, & although the indictment purported to set out the titles of the statutes in haec verba, it inaccurately described the title of one of them:—Held: (1) it was competent for the judge at the trial to amend the indictment by striking out the words which stated the time when the Acts were passed; (2) as to the misdescription of the title of the statute, which was not amended at the trial, as the reference was made to the statute only to indicate that the petition was presented after the passing of such statute, & as it was also alleged in the indictment that the petition was presented on May 20, 1859, being a day after such passing of which the ct. was bound to take notice, the description of the title of the statute might be altogether rejected; (3) semble: when the title of a statute is not correctly set out in an indictment, but is so described as to enable the ct. to know with certainty what statute is referred to, no objection to the indictment on account of such variance would now be sustained.—*R. v. #### PART VI. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 7.

2038 i. Indictment for obtaining by false pretences—“Falsely & fraudulently.”]—An indictment against J. S. bore, “You did pretend to J. H. . . . that you were possessed of a sum of money amounting to £1,900 . . . & that you were about to receive payment of the money, & did thus induce him to give you credit to the amount of £46 9s. 9d., which you failed to pay & had no intention of paying.” Objection to the relevancy in respect that the facts set forth did not constitute a crime repelled, on the ground that under the Criminal Procedure Act, 1887, the words “falsely & fraudulently” were to be read into the indictment as qualifying the word “pretend,” & that when this was done the indictment was relevant.—H. M. ADVOCATE v. SWAN (1888), 16 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 34.—SCOT.

k. Grievous bodily harm—“Maliciously.”]—An indictment under 12 Vict. s. 29, for causing grievous bodily harm must allege the offence to have been committed “maliciously” in the words of the Act.—R. v. JOPE (1855), 3 All. 161.—CAN.

l. ———.]—An indictment for doing grievous bodily harm, which alleged that the prisoner did “feloniously stab, cut, & wound” instead of alleging, in the terms of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 20, s. 17, that he did “unlawfully & maliciously” stab, is good.—R. v. FLYNN (1878), 2 L. & B. 321.—CAN.

m. Larceny — “Feliciously.”]—An indictment charged that the “prisoner did steal,” without charging that it was done feloniously. Before pleading the prisoner’s counsel moved to quash the indictment. After argument, the presiding judge allowed the indictment to be amended under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 29, s. 32, by adding the word “feliciously.” The prisoner was found guilty upon the amended indictment:—Held: the indictment without the “feliciously” was bad.—R. v. MORRISON (1879), 18 N. B. R. 682.—CAN.

o. — “Unlawfully did steal.”]—Prisoner was tried on the charge that he “unlawfully did steal one piece of Oregon pine wood”:—Held: the words “unlawfully did steal” in the charge meant & included everything necessary to constitute the offence of theft or stealing as defined by the Code, s. 305.—R. v. GEORGE (1902), 35 N. S. R. 42.—CAN.

p. Malicious injury to property—“Feliciously.”]—In an indictment purporting to be under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 22, s. 45 (D), for malicious injury to property, the word “feliciously” was omitted:—Held: bad.—R. v. GOUGH (1883), 3 O. R. 402.—CAN.

2042. — Uttering of a number of forged instruments at the same time.]—An indictment may charge in the same count the uttering of a number of forged instruments if these were all uttered at the same time, nor will the ct. put prosecutor to election on which receipt to proceed.—R. v. THOMAS (1800), 2 East, P. C. 934; 2 Leach, 877.

f. —[An accused should not be charged with more than one offence in a particular count. If it is clear on the face of the indictment that a count contains more than one offence, & no objection is taken before the plea, or if it is not clear, & evidence is attempted to be led & no objection is taken, it is too late to raise the objection afterwards where there is no prejudice to the accused.—R. v. VIVIAN (1917), T. P. D. 588.—S. AF.

g. Offence charged on divers days.—While an indictment charging the commission of a certain offence "on or about Aug. 8, 1920, & on & at divers other days & times, before that date" is objectionable in that it charges the commission of more than one offence, yet if no evidence is offered of other offences before said date, it cannot be said that the irregularity caused any substantial wrong or miscarriage to the accused, & under Criminal Code, s. 1019, a ct. of appeal should not hold that the trial judge was wrong in refusing to quash the indictment.—*R. v. h. Embezzlement.—Deft. was charged with having between certain dates, while acting as cashier, received various sums of money for which he was bound to account, but which he unlawfully & fraudulently converted to his own use. Objection was taken on the part of deft., that each taking constituted a separate offence, leave to amend was granted by substituting separate charges covering the amount specified in the original charge.—R. v. CROSS (1909), 43 N. S. R. 320; 6 E. L. R. 414; 14 Can. Crim. Cas. 171.—CAN.

k. —[Under Embezzlement Act no one act of embezzlement can be added or in any way worked out by proving any other act of embezzlement; each charge is perfectly independent of the other, & the corpus of the crime in each case is the particular act of embezzlement charged, & not a general intention or design to embezzle. It is therefore right that the different acts of embezzlement, neither having any legal connection with the crime involved in the other, should be stated in different counts.—R. v. DUFFY (1849), 1 Ir. Jur. 81, 105.—IR.

l. Assault & neglect.—A father was charged with neglect of his son. The first count of the indictment averred not only wilful neglect but also assault. There was a second count for assault. The only evidence of assault was that the son was deprived of his liberty by the door of his room being fastened. The jury found prisoner guilty of wilful neglect, but acquitted him of assault:—Held: the conviction should stand.—R. v. WATSON (1896), 30 I. L. T. 135.—IR.

m. Adultery.—A conviction for adultery on two counts of an indictment, the first charging an offence on Sept. 16, 1913, & the second an offence on Mar. 14, 1914, will not be quashed on a case reserved on objection that the evidence adduced in support of the second count was not admissible in support of the first, if the accused failed to avail himself of the privilege of applying to have each count tried separately.—*R. v. A conspiracy means a combination. In order to make out a conspiracy there must be some concert. The parties must put their heads together to do it. It is not every dishonest act that is the subject-matter of conspiracy. A wrong act may not be an indictable offence if one person only commits it, but if two or more persons conspire, combine, & confederate together to do a wrongful act, it is indictable. On Nov. 9, 1917, deft. pleaded "not guilty" to the indictment without making any objection. On Nov. 22, 1917, the case came on for trial, when deft. sought to demur to the indictment or to move to quash it, for defects apparent on the face. The judge refused leave to raise the question, as deft. had already pleaded. Particulars had been, without previous demand, delivered by the Crown on Nov. 20, stating that deft. did "publish seditious libel by publishing the following pamphlets." The following paragraphs 1 to 7, mentioning respectively seven pamphlets, each bearing a different title to the others, except that the seventh was not stated to have any title, & the seditious character & the purpose of publishing each was stated separately in its own paragraph, but no reference was made to any particular part or passage of any of them. The publications mentioned had been before the grand jury when they found the indictment. In view of these facts, & of the Code, ss. 859, 880, as to the delivery of particulars, the trial judge amended the indictment by changing the figures "184" into "134"—Code, s. 134, being obviously intended, & by adding the words "to wit, the matters contained in the annexed particulars." The indictment was not sent back to the grand jury, nor was deft. called upon to plead again; the trial proceeded, & jury found deft. guilty on the amended indictment with regard to two of the publications mentioned in the particulars:—Held: the verdict did not make the indictment good.—R. v. BAINBRIDGE (1918), 42 O. L. R. 203;

2183. —.]—Prisoner was tried & convicted upon an indictment which alleged that at an election for members of Parliament for the borough of I. holden on Nov. 25, 1885, he was guilty of corrupt practices against the form of the statute in that case made & provided. It was proved at the trial that he had promised money to two voters to induce them to vote. After verdict the objection was taken by prisoner's counsel that the indictment was bad, because it did not sufficiently describe the nature of the offence with which prisoner was charged:—Held: if the indictment were defective, the defect was cured after verdict; though on application before verdict, it might have been quashed.—*R. v. 2186. May be rejected as surplusage.]—If an indictment be in itself good, tautologous words shall be rejected thereon:—Held: prisoner not having been misled or prejudiced by the amendment, it was properly made.—R. v. PATTERSON (1895), 26 O. R. 656.—CAN.

2186 v. —.]—An indictment charging the commission of an offence "on or about Aug. 8, 1920, & on & at divers other days & times, before that date" is clearly objectionable in that it charges the commission of more than one offence, & where the accused objected to the inclusion of the words quoted, & the trial judge, allowed the Crown to amend the indictment by striking out the words:—Held: he was not wrong in doing so.—R. v. PARKIN, [1922] 1 W. W. R. 732, 733, 734; 66 D. L. R. 175; 37 Can. Crim. Cas. 35; 31 Man. L. R. 438.—CAN.

c. Uncertainty.]—An indictment defective in not stating that the property obtained was the property of the person defrauded is defective for uncertainty, & must be objected to before the jury is sworn.—R. v. WILLANS (1862), 1 Mad. 31; 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 94.—IND.

2186 i. Maybe rejected as surplusage.]—In an indictment charging the prisoner with stealing bank bills, the words "of the moneys, goods, & chattels" may be rejected as surplusage.—R. v. SAUNDERS (1853), 10 U. C. R. 544.—CAN.

2186 ii. —.]—Indictment for offering the following instrument knowing it to be forged: "I. J. H., do agree to W. C., of W., the full rite & privilege of all the whiteoke & elm & hickory lying & standing on lot 26, south part, on the 3rd concession P., for the sum of $30, now paid to H. by C., the receipt whereof is hear by me acknowledged." The jury having convicted prisoner:—Held: the instrument forged being set out in haec verba in the indictment, the description of its legal character would be surplusage, & was unnecessary.—R. v. CARSON (1864), 14 C. P. 309.—CAN.

2186 iii. —.]—Prisoner was found guilty on an indictment charging that he made an assault upon A., & him, A. did beat, wound & ill-treat." There was no evidence of any wounding:—Held: the indictment was substantially one for a common assault, & that the conviction was right.—R. v. SHANNON (1883), 23 N. B. R. 1.—CAN.

2186 iv. —.]—Prisoner had obtained cheques on the false pretence that "there were 2,680 bushels of beans" in his warehouse. He was indicted for obtaining the cheques on the false pretence "that there was then a large quantity of beans, to wit, 2,680 bushels," in his warehouse. During the trial the indictment was amended by striking out the words "a large quantity of beans, to wit," & prisoner be rejected as surplusage.—R. v. MORRIS (1774), 1 Leach, 109, C. C. R.

2190. —[—]—An indictment charged that deft., a surgeon, knowingly & with intention to deceive, signed a certificate required by 9 Geo. 4, c. 41, without having visited & personally examined the patient, contrary to the statute. The jury negatived the intention to deceive, & found deft. guilty, subject to the opinion of the ct. upon the case:—Held: in the description of this offence, the averment of intention was surplusage, & such unnecessary matter might be rejected as well in an indictment on a penal statute as at common law.—R. v. JONES (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 611; 9 L. J. O. S. M. C. 98; 109 E. R. 1270.

2191. —[—]—An indictment which charges that A. stole two shillings "of the goods & chattels of F." is good, as the words "of the goods & chattels," may be rejected as surplusage.—R. v. RADLEY (1849), 2 Car. & Kir. 974; 1 Den. 450; T. & M. 144; 3 New Sess. Cas. 651; 18 L. J. M. C. 184; 13 L. T. O. S. 550; 13 J. P. 424; 13 Jur. 544; 3 Cox, C. C. 460, C. C. R.

2192. —[—]—The first count of the indictment ment contains distinct averments, one material & another immaterial, the immaterial averment may be rejected as surplusage; but if the whole averment cannot be struck out without getting rid of a material part, the whole must be proved.—R. v. OTWAY (1849), 1 I. C. L. R. 69.—IR.

2186 viii. —[—]—Prisoner was indicted for shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm, & the indictment alleged the offence to have been committed with "a revolver then loaded with gunpowder & divers leaden bullets." The jury found the prisoner "Guilty of shooting at prosecutor with some sort of firearm, with intent to do grievous bodily harm, but it was not proved to have been loaded with leaden bullets."—Held: as the statute defined the offence simply as shooting at any person with intent, it was not necessary to specify the weapon & the loading; & that the prosecution was not bound to prove an unnecessary averment.—R. v. BELL, 4 J. R. N. S. 42.—N.Z.

2186 ix. —[—]—The indictment charged the prisoner in the first count with "feloniously," unlawfully, & maliciously wounding B.; & in another count with "feloniously" inflicting grievous bodily harm on B. The jury found a general verdict of "Guilty." The conviction was quashed because the counts were not good for felony under Offences against the Person Act, 1867, s. 15, & the jury had found that the acts were done feloniously. It was not competent for the judge to amend the indictment by striking out the word "feloniously" as surplusage.—R. v. BENNETT (1870), 1 C. A. 386.—N.Z.

forcible entry at common law may be rejected as surplusage.—R. v. NIRA-MOANA (1880), O. B. & F. 76.—N.Z.

2186 xi. —[—]—Where the indictment contained beside the allegation of perjury, a description of the offence defined in a statute, the ct. could treat the allegation of perjury as surplusage & hold the indictment sufficient under the statute.—R. v. WILSON (1912), 31 N. Z. L. R. 850.—N.Z.

2186 xii. —[—]—In an indictment charging the panel with having received on behalf of his master the sum of £15 8s. by a bill or promissory note, payable to his master two months after date, & having embezzled "the said bill or promissory note or the said sum of £15 8s.," the words "of the said sum of £15 8s." were directed by the ct. to be struck out.—H.M. ADVOCATE v. MACKENZIE (1846), Arkley, 97.—SCOT.

2186 xiii. —[—]—In charging the offence of culpable homicide through an explosion of dynamite in the custody of accused, which he had culpably, & charged prisoner with stealing certain goods & chattels, the second count charged him with receiving "the goods & chattels of the value aforesaid so as aforesaid feloniously stolen." After objection that he could not be found to have feloniously received goods stolen by himself, the case went to the jury & prisoner was acquitted upon the first count & convicted upon the second:—Held: the conviction was good, as the ct., to support the indictment, would, on the second count, reject as irrelevant the averment implied from the words "so as aforesaid" that the goods were stolen by prisoner.—R. v. HUNTLEY (1860), Bell, C. C. 238; 29 L. J. M. C. 70; 1 L. T. 384; 24 J. P. 133; 6 Jur. N. S. 80; 8 W. R. 183; 8 Cox, C. C. 260, C. C. R.

2193. —[—]—An indictment charged prisoner with the offence of making a false declaration before a justice, that he had lost a pawnbroker's ticket, "whereas in truth & in fact he had not lost the said ticket, but had sold, lent, or deposited it, as a security to one C., etc."—Held: the allegation "but had sold, lent, or deposited, etc.," did not render the indictment ambiguous or uncertain, but was pure surplusage, which might be rejected, & need not be proved.—R. v. PARKER (1870), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 225; 39 L. J. M. C. 60; 21 L. T. 724; 34 J. P. 148; 18 W. R. 353; 11 Cox, C. C. 478, C. C. R.

2186 xiv. —[—]—The ct. has power at a pleading diet to allow words to be struck out of an indictment if the alteration does not vary the crime with which the panel is charged.—H.M. ADVOCATE v. M'INTOSH (1881), 8 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 13; 18 Sc. L. R. 290.—SCOT.

2186 xv. —[—]—Where certain allegations in an indictment are clear surplusage, they can be ignored, & it is not necessary to prove such allegations in order to obtain a conviction.—R. v. KHAN (1917), T. P. D. 234.—S. AF.

4.—Form of indictments: Sub-sects. 12 &amp; 13.]

2195. —.]—Upon the trial of an indictment for publishing a libel upon the directors of a co., it is not necessary to prove that prosecutors were the de jure directors of the co., & properly appointed as such, it being admitted that they were the acting directors, & the libel being published upon them as such acting directors, & the averment that they were directors is an immaterial averment.—R. v. BOALER (1892), 67 L. T. 354; 58 J. P. 792; 36 Sol. Jo. 753; 17 Cox, C. C. 569.

2196. Election of accused to be tried by a jury need not be averred.]—Where a prisoner who is charged with an offence punishable summarily with more than three months' imprisonment has exercised his right under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 17, & has claimed to be tried by a jury, it is not necessary that the indictment found against him should contain any averment of such a claim having been made.—R. v. CHAMBERS (1896), 65 L. J. M. C. 214; 75 L. T. 76; 60 J. P. 586; 12 T. L. R. 613; 40 Sol. Jo. 730; 18 Cox, C. C. 401, C. C. R.

SUB-SECT. 13.—AMENDMENT.

See Indictments Act, 1915 (c. 90), s. 5.

2197. At court of trial.]—On the trial of an indictment charging deft. with obstructing a footway leading from A. to C. it appeared that there was a way leading from A. to C., but that it passed through an intermediate point B., & that the way was a coinage way from A. to B., & only a footway from B. to C. The obstruction was between B. & C.:—Held: assuming this to be a misdescription, the indictment might, under Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (c. 100), s. 1, be amended at the trial by substituting a description of the way as a footway leading from B. to C.—R. v. STURGE (1854), 3 E. & B. 734; 23 L. J. M. C. 172; 23 L. T. O. S. 143; 18 J. P. 343; 18 Jur. 1052; 118 E. R. 1316.

2199. —.]—A coroner's jury, on inquiring into the death of G. from a railway accident, found that the railway "directors did feloniously kill & slay G." without naming individuals. A certiorari to quash being moved:—Held: the verdict was bad for uncertainty, & the ct. had, under Coroners Act, 1887 (c. 71), s. 20, no power to amend, such power being confined to the ct. which tries the indictment.—R. v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (DIRECTORS) (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 410; 57 L. J. M. C. 31; 58 L. T. 765; 52 J. P. 772; 36 W. R. 506; 16 Cox, C. C. 410, D. C.

evidence—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 18 (c. 100), s. 1.]—B. was indicted for obtaining from one D. by the false pretence that she had made funeral arrangements with a certain undertaker & had paid him 5s. by way of deposit for the burial of S., a nurse child, who had died under her care. The evidence was that the false pretence was made as to the funeral arrangements for another such nurse child, D. It appeared that deft. had also made certain false statements to A. as to the funeral of S.:—Held: there was power to make the amendment under the above sect.—R. v. BYERS (1907), 71 J. P. 205.

2201. — Consent of court necessary.]—No count can be added to or amendment made in a indictment found by the grand jury without the consent of the ct. of trial.—R. v. ERRINGTON (1922), 16 Cr. App. Rep. 148, C. O. A.

O'CALLAGHAN* (1880), 14 Cox, C. C. 499.

2207. — At close of case for prosecution.]—As a general rule, a judge on the trial of an indictment will not allow an amendment to be made after counsel for the defence has addressed the jury. The proper course is for prosecutor's counsel to adduce all his evidence & ask for the amendment before he closes his case, & if the amendment is made, prisoner's counsel addresses the jury on the indictment as amended.—R. v. RYMES (1853), 3 Car. & Kir. 326.

2208. — After verdict.]—A count for receiving stolen goods the property of A., alleged that prisoner received the same, A. well knowing them to have been stolen. The error was discovered after verdict, & prisoner's counsel moved in arrest of judgment, on which the ct. amended the count by striking out A. & inserting the name of prisoner:—Held: the ct. had no power to amend after verdict.—*R. v. ## PART VI. SECT. 4. SUB-SECT. 13.

2197 iv. —.]—An amendment to the indictment changing the Christian name of the prosecutrix is proper to be allowed.—R. v. FAULKNER (1911), 16 B. C. R. 229.—CAN.

2208 i. Time for amendment—After verdict.]—Indictment cannot be amended on a motion to set aside verdict, or for new trial.—R. v. CARLETON COUNTY CORPN. (1882), 1 O. R. 277.—CAN.

2208 ii. — —.]—On a case stated as to the effect of a verdict; & for the amendment of the indictment:—Held: the indictment could be amended, but as the point in question had never really been in issue at the trial a new trial should be ordered on the amended indictment.—R. v. STONE, [1920] N. Z. L. R. 462.—N.Z.

2208 iii. — —.]—The indictment may be amended at any stage of the trial.—R. v. WILLIAMS (1862), 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 94; 1 Mad. 31.—IND.

e. — End of opening by prosecution.]—In a case where three accused persons were indicted for "that they did amongst themselves conspire," the afterwards, with intent to defraud their creditors, unlawfully, within four months next before the presentation of a bkpcy. petition against them, they being traders, did pawn, etc., certain property which they had obtained upon credit, & had not paid for. On objection after verdict:—Held: the indictment did not show substantially the offence under Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 11 (15), & an amendment could not then be made.—R. v. OLIVER & AUSTIN (1877), 36 L. T. 114; 41 J. P. 310; 25 W. R. 323; 13 Cox, C. C. 588, C. C. R. Annotation:—Distd. R. v. Knight (1878), 37 L. T. 801.

2211. ——— Where verdict conditional.]—R. v. DOSSI, No. 2009, ante.

2213. ———.]—In an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences, the pretence alleged was that deft. had been to B. on behalf of prosecutrix, & had served a certain order of affiliation on one J. & that he was entitled to receive for serving the said order the sum of 5s.:—Held: (1) this averment was not supported by proof that deft. said that he had been with the order to B. to serve J. & left it with the landlady where J. lodged, he being out, etc.; (2) this was not an amendable variance within the meaning of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1.—R. v. BAILEY (1852), 19 L. T. O. S. 11; 6 Cox, C. C. 29.

2214. ———.]—The ct. will not amend an indictment after plea, where, in its amended form, it might be demurrable for generality.—R. v. LALLEMENT (1853), 6 Cox, C. C. 204.

2215. ———.]—Upon the trial of an indictment against bkpts. under 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106, s. 251, for embezzling part of their personal estate to the value of £10, to wit, bank notes & money:—Held: the description of the money embezzled, although laid under a videlicet, was a material averment, & such as the ct., in its discretion would decline to amend.—R. v. DAVISON & GORDON (1855), 7 Cox, C. C. 158.

Annotation:—Mentd. R. v. Rogers (1877), 3 Q. B. D. 28.

2216. ———.]—The ct. will not amend, under the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (c. 100), s. 1, an indictment by striking out the word "feloniously" & thereby convert the charge into a misdemeanour, where the document given in evidence to sustain a charge of forgery, made felony under Forgery Act, 1831, 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4 (c. 66), ss. 3, 10, will not sustain the charge of felony, although evidence of a common law misdemeanour.—R. v. WRIGHT (1860), 2 F. & F. 320.

2218. ———.]—There is no power to amend an indictment containing a count which charges prisoner, under Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 13 (1), that in incurring a debt he obtained credit by false pretences, by striking out the allegations of false pretences from the count, & inserting therein an allegation that prisoner incurred the debt by means of fraud.—R. v. BENSON, [1908] 2 K. B. 270; 77 L. J. K. B. 644; 98 L. T. 933; 72 J. P. 286; 24 T. L. R. 557; 52 Sol. Jo. 516; 21 Cox, C. C. 631, C. C. R.

judge on the completion of the prosecutor's opening speech, & before any evidence was given, allowed the indictment to be amended by adding the words "& with another person whose name to the prosecutor is unknown":—Held: the judge had no power to make the amendment.—R. v. HILL (1909), 9 S. R. N. S. W. 563.—AUS.

f. ——— After close of defence.]—Where stolen property has been laid in a wrong person, the indictment may be amended, even after the counsel for prisoner has addressed the jury & closed.—R. v. FULLARTON & CROOKS (1853), 6 Cox, C. C. 194.—IR.

g. Where amendment too substantial.—No evidence to support amendment.]—Prisoner was indicted for stealing the cattle of M. At the trial M. gave evidence that he was nineteen years of age: that his father was dead, & the goods were bought with the proceeds of his father's estate; that his mother was administratrix, & that the witness managed the property, & bought the cattle in question. On objection taken the indictment was amended, by stating the goods to be the property of the mother, & no further evidence of her administrative character was given, the judge holding the evidence of M. sufficient, & not leaving any question as to the property to the jury:—Held: the judge had power to amend under C. S. C., c. 99, s. 78; but the conviction on the amended indictment could not be sustained, there being no evidence of the mother's representative character.—R. v. JACKSON (1869), 19 C. P. 280.—CAN.

k. ———.]—On the trial of the prisoner on an indictment charging him with receiving property which one M. had feloniously stolen, etc., the evidence showed that he had stolen the property, & that the prisoner was guilty of receiving the same, knowing it to have been stolen. For the defence it was proved that M. had been previously tried on a charge of stealing the same property & acquitted. The prosecution then applied to strike out of the indictment the allegation that M. had stolen the property, & to insert the words "some evil-disposed person," which the judge allowed:—Held: the amendment was improperly allowed.—R. v. FRITHSON (1876), 20 N. B. R. 259.—CAN.

l. Where accused not prejudiced.]—Prisoner was indicted for indecent exposure "in a certain public place in the presence of divers persons."

The evidence showed the act to have been committed on the verandah of a private house & where it could not be seen from the public road, in the presence of several young girls:—Held: judge was right, under Criminal Law Amendment Act, s. 313, in amending the indictment according to the proof by striking out the word "public" as immaterial, the prisoner not being thereby prejudiced in his defence on the merits.—R. v. MADERCINE (1899), 20 N. S. W. L. R. 36.—AUS.

m. ———.]—A judge has power under Crimes Act, 1900, No. 40, s. 305, to amend a material variance if satisfied that the accused will not thereby be prejudiced in his defence or suffer any substantial wrong.—R. v. JACKSON (1904), 4 S. R. N. S. W. 732; 21 N. S. W. W. N. 241.—AUS.

n. Description of place where offence committed.]—Semble: (1) an indictment may be amended by supplying an allegation of the place where the

o. Description of intent.]—An indictment that "A. attempted to kill & murder D." sufficiently discloses an indictable offence, & the ct. has the power to allow it to be amended so as to read that "A. with intent to commit murder, shot at D."—R. v. MOONEY (1905), Q. R. 15 K. B. 57.—CAN.

p. Description of offence.—Offence different in character from that originally charged.]—An indictment charged deft. with knowingly & fraudulently by false pretences obtaining $500 from the N. Bank, after the evidence had partially been taken, the ct. allowed an amendment of the indictment to charge that deft. did in incurring a debt or liability to the N. Bank obtain credit under false pretences. Upon such amendment the jury found deft. guilty:—Held: Criminal Code, s. 889, allowing amendments to indictments when there is a variance between the evidence given & the charge did not permit of amendments charging an offence different in character from that originally charged.—R. v. COHEN (1912), 22 O. W. R. 456; 3 O. W. N. 1409; 26 O. L. R. 497; 5 D. L. R. 437.—CAN.

2220. Indictment as amended stands.]—If it is contended that we cannot alter the verdict upon an amended indictment to a verdict upon the indictment before it was amended, I should say that that was so (BLACKBURN, J.).—R. v. PRITCHARD (1861), Le. & Ca. 34; 30 L. J. M. C. 169; 4 L. T. 340; 25 J. P. 484; 7 Jur. N. S. 557; 9 W. R. 579; 8 Cox, C. C. 461, C. C. R.

2221. —.]—When an indictment is amended at the ct. of trial, the Ct. of Crown Cases Reserved cannot consider it as it originally stood, but only in its amended form.—R. v. WEBSTER (1861), Le. & Ca. 77; 31 L. J. M. C. 17; 5 L. T. 327; 26 J. P. 212; 7 Jur. N. S. 1208; 10 W. R. 20; 9 Cox, C. C. 13, C. C. R.

2222. —.]—Prisoner worked at a mill in the same room with three fellow-workmen, & was sent by them on pay-night for the wages of the four from the cashier of the works. The cashier gave the money for the four in a lump to prisoner, who then went away & never gave any of it to his fellow-workmen. He was indicted for the larceny, & the indictment laid the property in the money in the workmen. At the trial, the indictment was amended by alleging the property to be in the proprietors of the works, instead of the workmen:—Held: the property was rightly laid as at first, in the men, & not in the masters, & as the conviction had taken place on the amended indictment, which was wrong, the conviction must be quashed.—R. v. BARNES (1866), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 45; 35 L. J. M. C. 204; 14 L. T. 601; 30 J. P. 420; 12 Jur. N. S. 549; 14 W. R. 805; 10 Cox, C. C. 255, C. C. R.

SUB-SECT. 14.—ORDER FOR PARTICULARS.

2223. When granted—Conspiracy.]—An indictment for conspiracy “to defraud W. of divers goods & in pursuance of the conspiracy defrauding him of divers goods, to wit of the value of £100,” cannot be quashed for not specifying the particular goods of which the prosecutor has been defrauded.

Semle: the ct. in such a case will not call upon prosecutor to deliver to deft. a particular of the goods referred to in the indictment.—R. v. (1819), 1 Chit. 698.

Annotations:—Mentd. R. v. Parker (1842), 3 Q. B. 292; R. v. Blake (1844), 6 Q. B. 126.

in first.]—Deft. was indicted for that he “unlawfully did cause to be taken by B. certain poison . . . with intent thereby to endanger the life of B.” The trial of deft. upon this indictment was begun; but at the conclusion of the case for the Crown the judge, being of opinion that there was no evidence to support the charge, amended the indictment so that it read, “did cause to be administered to or taken by B. certain poison . . . with intent thereby to injure, aggrieve, or annoy B.” The original charge was probably intended to be laid under Criminal Code, s. 277, though it did not follow the language of that sect., the amended charge was laid under sect. 278:—Held: an act of one person which is intended to endanger the life of another person includes an act to injure, aggrieve, or annoy such other person; & therefore, if not proved guilty of the offence charged in the original indictment, deft. might, without any amendment, have been convicted of the offence of administering poison with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy; & as the grand jury assented to the indictment for the major offence, they must be found to have approved of an indictment for the minor offence.—R. v. VOLL (1920), 48 O. L. R. 437; 57 D. L. R. 440; 19 O. W. N. 270.—CAN.

t. — Conformable to statute.]—A defective indictment is amendable under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 20, s. 32.—R. v. FLYNN (1878), 2 P. & B. 321.—CAN.

a. —.]—Deft. was indicted & convicted for a criminal assault committed upon the person of W., “a girl under the age of fourteen years, to wit, of the age of eight years.” It was not alleged in the indictment that the person upon whom the offence

2227. —.]—On an indictment against several defts. for a conspiracy, it appeared that there were eight counts, setting out particular charges, & one count charging defts. in general terms with a conspiracy to defraud by diverse subtle means & contrivances:—Held: defts. were entitled to have particulars given them of the specific charge intended to be relied on in support of the general count.—R. v. ALLEYNE (1851), 11 L. T. O. S. 99, 111; 15 J. P. 835.

Where an indictment contained counts charging a conspiracy to cheat tradesmen of goods, without mentioning any specific case, or name, time, or place:—Held: deft. was entitled to such particulars.—R. v. RYCROFT (1852), 6 Cox, C. C. 76.

2230. —.]—R. v. MELLERSH (1852), 18 L. T. O. S. 241; 16 J. P. Jo. 53.

2231. —.]—On a general count for conspiracy, deft. is entitled to particulars of the acts relied upon in support of the charge, but on a special count alleging the overt acts, the ct. will not order particulars to be furnished, in the absence of an affidavit on the part of deft., that he has no knowledge of the overt acts charged, & does not possess sufficient information to enable him to meet them.

Qu.: whether with such an affidavit, deft. would be entitled to particulars.—R. v. ESDALE, was committed was not the wife of prisoner:—Held: the expression in the Code, s. 266, “not being his wife,” is an exception, & if required to be stated in the indictment & negatived, the defect could have been remedied by the judge by an amendment. Under sect. 723 (2).—R. v. WRIGHT (1906), 39 N. S. R. 103.—CAN.

b. Amendment allowed as terms of granting application to withdraw plea.]—An indictment, framed under Insolvent Act of 1869, s. 147, omitted the words “with intent to defraud his creditors.” Deft. pleaded to the indictment, but afterwards applied for leave to withdraw his plea & demur, the judge decided that, if he allowed this he should also permit the prosecutor to amend the indictment by inserting those words:—Held: his decision was right.—R. v. McLEAN (1877), 1 P. & B. 377.—CAN.

R. v. BROWN, R. v. STAPLETON (1857), 6 W. R. 60; 8 Cox, C. C. 69; 21 J. P. Jo. 772.

Where the names are unknown that must be stated in the indictment.—R. v. PERRIN & BURST (1908), 72 J. P. 144, 24 T. L. R. 487.

2233. ——— Embezzlement.]—If a prisoner, indicted for embezzlement, does not know the specific acts of embezzlement intended to be charged against him, he should apply to prosecutor for a particular of the charges, & if it be refused, the judge will, on motion, supported by proper affidavits, grant an order for such particular to be given, & postpone the trial, if necessary. Such particular ought, at least, to state the names of the persons from whom the money is alleged to have been received.—R. v. HODGSON (1828), 3 C. & P. 422.

Annotation:—Mentd. R. v. Lister (1856), 26 L. J. M. C. 26.

2234. ———.]—Where a party is charged with embezzlement, the judge, before the indictment is found, will order prosecutor to furnish prisoner with a particular of the charges, if prisoner makes an affidavit that he does not know what the charges are, & that he has applied to prosecutor for a particular, & it has been refused.—R. v. BOOTYMAN (1832), 5 C. & P. 300.

Annotation:—Refd. R. v. Haslam (1855), 26 L. T. O. S. 108.

2235. ———.]—The ct. will not order particulars of a charge to be delivered to a deft. upon an indictment not before the ct.—R. v. HASLAM (1855), 26 L. T. O. S. 108; 1 Jur. N. S. 1139; 4 W. R. 122; 19 J. P. Jo. 756.

SECT. 5.—FINDING OF AN INDICTMENT BY A GRAND JURY.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

2242. Must be found by twelve.]—The caption of an indictment must show that it was taken on the oath of twelve men.—CLYNARD'S CASE (1599), Cro. Eliz. 654; 78 E. R. 893.

2244. Number of grand jury—Whether more than twenty-three.]—A grand jury must not consist of more than 23. If more than 23 have been sworn & have found a bill, the ct. will not, on that account, quash the indictment after deft. has removed it by certiorari, gone to trial, & been convicted.

The caption of the indictment on which deft. had been convicted as above stated the presentment to be made by the oaths of A., B., C., D., etc., naming 12 grand jurors, & others, good & lawful men, etc. A rule was obtained, with a view to a writ of error, calling on the clerk of the peace to show cause why the caption should not be amended by inserting the true names & number of the grand jury sworn.—Held: (1) the caption was not incorrect in omitting to state the number & all the names of the grand jury & under the circumstances, no amendment could be made in it; (2) the ct. would refuse to receive an affidavit from a grand jurymen as to the number of grand jurors or what passed in the grand jury room.—R. v. MARSH (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 236; Will. Woll. & Dav. 150; 6 L. J. M. C. 153; 1 Jur. 38; 112 E. R. 89; sub nom. R. v. MARCH, 1 J. P. 245.

PART VI. SECT. 5, SUB-SECT. 1.

a. Number of grand jury.]—The sheriff having erroneously chosen 24 grand jurors in place of 12, & the first 12 alone having been called, & one of them finding himself ill, 11 only were sworn, who brought in a true bill for murder against the person.—Held: their report was valid, the law not requiring the agreement of more than 7 grand jurors in all the provinces where the number does not exceed 13.—R. v. POIRIER (1898), Q. R. 7 Q. B. 483.—CAN.

The two prisoners were tried together & convicted:—Held: (LORD FINLAY diss.) the proceedings were a nullity, & the Ct. of Criminal Appeal, in quashing the conviction, had power, under Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (c. 23), to order applt. to be tried according to law.—*CRANE v. 2368. — Discretion of court.]—A trial at bar ought not to be granted upon a general allegation of difficulty in the cause.

The granting of a trial at bar is entirely in the discretion of the ct., & such a trial ought not to be granted without good reason, because it is very expensive to the parties & the business of the other suitors is thereby delayed (per CUR.).—R. v. CAERMARTHEN BURGESSES (1753), Say. 79; 96 E. R. 809.

SECT. 4.—PROCEEDINGS BEFORE PLEA.

SUB-SECT. 1.—APPEARANCE.

A. Appearance of Prosecutor.

2370. No notice of trial need be given to prosecutor.]—Where deft. is under recognisances to appear & take his trial at a particular sessions of the Central Criminal Ct., no notice of trial to prosecutor is requisite, & he is bound to be prepared to try at that session.—R. v. PARKER (1849), 13 J. P. 460; 3 Cox, C. C. 299.

2371. Failure to prosecute—Recognisances not discharged.]—The ct., on default of prosecution, can only respite & not discharge, a recognisance.—ANON. (1702), 7 Mod. Rep. 97; 87 E. R. 1119.

2372. — —.]—The Ct. at the Old Bailey refused to discharge, without the preferment of any bill, the recognisances of prosecutors being members of a society for promoting religious knowledge among the poor, who had caused a servant to be committed for embezzlement, the application not being made on the ground of any defect in the evidence, but on the ground that they, prosecutors, thought that the reformation of the offender would be best promoted by such a course.—R. v. PAUL (1834), 6 C. & P. 323.

2373. — — Penalty may be mitigated.]—Where the ct. refuse to discharge a recognisance on failure to prosecute they have power to mitigate the penalty.—Re HOOPER (1824), M'Cle. 578; 148 E. R. 241.

2374. — —.]—A prosecutor who has required the magistrates to take his recognisances to prosecute, on a charge within Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (c. 17), s. 2, when the magistrates have refused to commit the person charged, must either go on with the prosecution or have his recognisances forfeited, as it would defeat the object of the statute if he were allowed to move to have his recognisances discharged.—R. v. HARGREAVES (1861), 2 F. & F. 790, N. P.

at bar is his right. If the prosecution is not the King's, then there must be grounds laid before the ct. to induce them to grant such a trial.

In criminal cases of great difficulty, the ct. will grant a trial at bar.—R. v. HAYES (1801), Rowe, 565.—IR.

c. Power of court to proceed—Absence of judge.]—Semble: a trial at bar may be proceeded with, notwithstanding the absence of one of the judges who sat during a portion of the trial.—It. v. O'CONNELL (1844), 1 Cox, C. C. 397.—IR.

PART VII. SECT. 1.

a. Whether by jury.]—The power of the Commonwealth Parliament conferred by 63 & 64 Vict. c. 12, s. 122, to make laws for the govt. of a territory, whether that power is exercised directly or through a subordinate legislature, is not restricted by the provision in sect. 80 of above Act, that the trial on indictment of any offence against any law of the Commonwealth shall be by jury. By Ordinance No. 7 of 1907 of Papua, it was provided that the trial of persons of European descent charged with a crime punishable by death should be held before a jury of four persons, but that "save as aforesaid the trials of all issues, both civil & criminal, shall as heretofore be held without a jury":—Held: a person of European descent who was charged in Papua with an assault occasioning bodily harm, to which he pleaded not guilty, was properly tried without a jury.—R. v. BERNASCONI (1915), 19 C. L. R. 629.—AUS.

2376. — Recognisances cannot be enlarged after discharge of grand jury.]—When a prosecutor has entered into a recognisance under the provisions of Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (c. 17), s. 2, to prosecute a charge, but fails to prefer his bill of indictment before the grand jury, the ct. cannot, after the grand jury have been discharged, entertain an application by him to enlarge his recognisance to the next session.—R. v. EAYRES (1900), 64 J. P. 217.

2378. — Opinion of Attorney-General as to propriety of prosecution.]—Where a prisoner has been committed for trial at the assizes, & parties bound over by a magistrate, to prosecute & give evidence, the judge will not discharge the recognisances on an intimation that the A.-G. does not think it a proper case for prosecution.

Semble: the proper course is for the A.-G. to enter a nolle prosequi.—R. v. FREAKLEY (1852), 6 Cox, C. C. 75.

2379. Bound over to the "next assizes"—Whether special commission of assize included.]—Where a witness is bound over to appear at the "next assizes & general gaol delivery," that means the ordinary assizes & general gaol delivery, & does not apply to a special commission of gaol delivery. Upon his not appearing the judge will not estreat the recognisances.—R. v. WALKER (1843), 2 L. T. O. S. 288; 1 Cox, C. C. 14.

2380. Where prosecution has not instructed counsel—Practice.]—Where no counsel is engaged for the prosecution, & the depositions are handed, by direction of the ct., to a gentleman at the bar, he should consider himself as counsel for the Crown, & act in all respects as he would if he had been instructed by prosecutor. He should not consider himself merely as acting in assistance of the judge, by examining the witnesses.—R. v. LITTLETON (1840), 9 C. & P. 671.

2381. — ]—A judge should not be put to prosecute. Therefore, if prosecutor has omitted to instruct counsel, the ct. will direct the depositions, with the fee indorsed, to be delivered to the junior counsel present, to conduct the prosecution.—R. v. — (1843), 1 L. T. O. S. 458; 1 Cox, C. C. 48.

Annotation:—Refd. R. v. Farrell & Moore (1848), 3 Cox, C. C. 139.

2382. — ]—The judge ought not to act as prosecutor, as counsel for the prosecution, & as judge. Where a prosecution is not prepared by an attorney, the ct. will hand the depositions to counsel. But every prosecution ought to be conducted by counsel & attorney.—ANON. (1851), 17 L. T. O. S. 260.

B. Appearance o.

(a) In General.

2384. Failure to appear when on bail—Recognisance not discharged—Effect of estreat may be suspended.]—If a party indicted at the assizes enter into a recognisance, with the condition of which he afterwards fails to comply, whereby it becomes estreated, although the ct. cannot discharge the recognisance, they will, if they see proper cause, suspend the effect of the estreat.—Ex p. STOWMAN (1838), 2 J. P. 345; sub nom. Ex p. SLOEMAN, 2 Jur. 821.

2385. — Recognisance of prosecutor enlarged till arrest of accused.]—Where a prisoner on bail has made default, the recognisance of prosecutor may be enlarged till the apprehension of prisoner.—Re YOUNG (1847), 9 L. T. O. S. 394; 2 Cox, C. C. 280.

2386. Accused must surrender at the opening of the session.]—A prisoner who has been admitted to bail, & who surrenders after the opening of the commission, is not in custody "at the time of the holding of the assizes" within the meaning of Winter Assizes Acts, 1876 (c. 57), & 1877 (c. 46), & cannot therefore be tried. In order to entitle himself to be tried he should surrender before the opening of the commission.—R. v. STAFFORD (1879), 14 Cox, C. C. 353.

2387. Securing appearance by bench warrant—When bench warrant issued.]—Bench warrants will not be granted unless it is necessary that the party charged should be at once taken into custody, or unless shown that the party charged with the offence is about to quit the country.—R. v. WHITTAKER (1859), 2 F. & F. 1.

2388. — Practice at Central Criminal Court.]—The practice of the Central Criminal Ct. as to the time when a bench warrant should issue, & as to the form such bench warrant should take, ought not to be altered without the authority generally of the comrs. of that ct.—R. v. NICHOLS (1900), 64 J. P. 217.

2391. — Duration of warrant.]—A warrant issued to arrest a person on a bill found for a misdemeanour, & to have him at the next session, is not functus officio after the session expires, but the party may be taken up at any time.—MAYHEW v. HILL (1798), 2 Esp. 683, N. P.

2392. When accused has been removed to lunatic asylum since committal—Recognisances enlarged—Trial postponed.]—R. v. DWERRYHOUSE (1847), 9 L. T. O. S. 454; 2 Cox, C. C. 291; subsequent proceedings, 2 Cox, C. C. 446.

2393. — Recognisances respited sine die.]—A prisoner committed for trial upon a charge of murder having become insane was removed to a lunatic asylum, by virtue of a warrant under the hand of a Principal Secretary of State. The grand jury, at the assizes at which he would in due course have been tried, found a true bill against him:—Held: the proper course was to respite the recognisances sine die.—R. v. BLACKWELL (1857), 7 Cox, C. C. 353.

2394. — Power of judge of assize to issue habeas corpus.]—Where a prisoner was committed for trial by the magistrates to the assizes, but,

(b) Representation by Counsel.

2398. Defence by counsel—Prisoners jointly charged & represented cannot be separately represented after plea.—Prisoners were indicted for the murder & manslaughter of A. (inter alia) by a series of beatings & assaults. At the trial, certain assaults were put in evidence, & relied upon by the Crown as being the cause of death, but the surgeon who made a post-mortem examination being of opinion that the death was occasioned, not by the assaults so proved & relied upon, but by a blow upon the head, of the cause of which there was no evidence whatever, the judge directed the jury that prisoners were entitled to an acquittal:—Held: (1) the judge had rightly so directed the jury; (2) under 7 Will. 4, & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, prisoners could not have been lawfully convicted of assault under the circumstances above named, inasmuch as the assault contemplated by the statute must be such as was a part of the very act & transaction prosecuted, & also conduced to the death.

Prisoners, having been subsequently indicted for those assaults with intent to wound, & with intent by such wounding to do A. grievous bodily harm, pleaded autrefois acquit, & the judge having directed the jury, upon the trial of this plea, to the effect that if they were satisfied there were several distinct & independent assaults, some or any of which did not in any way conduce to the death of deceased, it would be their duty to find a verdict for the Crown:—Held: (3) (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J., JERVIS, C.J., PARKE, B., ALDERSON, B., MAULE, J., PATTESON, J., WIGHTMAN, J., & MARTIN, B.) such direction was not strictly right, inasmuch as the issue raised by the plea was, whether prisoners had been before tried for the same offence; (4) (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J., JERVIS, C.J., PARKE, B., ALDERSON, B., MAULE, J., & MARTIN, B.) the conviction was also bad by reason of the misdirection; (5) (POLLOCK, C.B., PATTESON, J., COLERIDGE, WIGHTMAN, CRESSWELL, ERLE, WILLIAMS, & TALFOURD, JJ.) the conviction would be affirmed.

(6) Where prisoners had joined in their plea at the trial & were represented by counsel appearing for them jointly, & not separately, according to the practice of the Ct. of Criminal Appeal, they are not entitled to appear by separate counsel at the hearing of the appeal.—*R. v. 2400. — Accused must not interfere.—(1) On a trial for murder, prisoner objecting to be defended by counsel, but in the result allowing counsel to act for him, he was not afterwards allowed to raise any objection to the proceeding.

(2) Prisoner being arraigned on two indictments & having with apparent intelligence, pleaded to one & declined to plead to the other, the plea of not guilty was entered for him by statute, with the assent of counsel who appeared for him. The case being then opened, & the first witness examined, & it being then set up by his counsel in the course of the case that he was insane now, or not in a fit state to be tried:—Held: the proper time for making that suggestion was before prisoner pleaded, & had it been so made, a jury should have been empanelled to try the question whether he was sane now & in a fit state to be tried.—R. v. SOUTHEY (1865), 4 F. & F. 864.

2402. — To prepare special plea.—The ct. will not reject a plea of autrefois convict, on account of the informal manner in which it is handed in by prisoner, but will assign counsel to put it into a formal shape, & postpone the trial to give time for its preparation.—*R. v. There is no power under the Act to appoint a counsel only, without a solr., to defend a poor prisoner. The Act does not contain any provisions showing how the judge is to satisfy himself that prisoner's means are insufficient for him to obtain legal aid.—R. v. CALIENDO (NUNZIO) (1904), 68 J. P. 47.

2412. — —.]—Prisoner was indicted at quarter sessions for attempting to commit larceny, & a subsequent count in the indictment charged a previous conviction. He was arraigned upon & pleaded to both counts. Objection was taken to the arraignment as contravening the provisions of Larceny Act, 1861 (c. 96), s. 116, which require that upon an indictment for an offence shall in the first instance be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence, & that until he be found guilty of that offence he shall not be called upon to plead to the charge of the previous conviction. The recorder accordingly adjourned the trial to the next sessions. At that sessions prisoner was tried. There was no fresh arraignment, but his former pleas were treated as standing. He was, however, given in charge to the jury upon the first count only, & was found guilty on that count:—Held: although the arraignment did not take place at the sessions at which prisoner was tried, & although the fact of his previous conviction was not disclosed to the jury by whom he was convicted, either by the manner of giving him into their charge or otherwise, the fact that the arraignment did not comply with the provisions of the sect. was such a substantial defect as could not be cured by verdict & the conviction must be quashed.

Upon the argument in error no counsel appeared for prisoner but the ct. allowed Mr. T., who had defended him at the sessions, to appear as amicus curiæ & state the points upon prisoner's behalf.—*FAULKNER v. 2414. Holding up hand is mere ceremony.]—LILBURNE'S CASE, No. 2410, ante.

2415. —.]—It is no essential part of any trial that prisoner should hold up his hand at the bar; there is no record made of it when it is done; the only use of it is to show the ct. who prisoner is, & when that is apparent the ct. does often proceed against him though he refuse to hold up his hand at the bar; therefore the omission of that ceremony in this case, is no legal exception (LORD FINCH, C.).—STAFFORD'S (LORD) CASE (1680), 7 State Tr. 1217.

2420. Jury empanelled to try if mute of malice or by visitation of God.]—If a person indicted for felony stand mute upon his arraignment, the ct. may direct the sheriff to return a jury instantly to try whether he stand mute obstinately, or by the visitation of God; & if they find that he stand obstinately mute, sentence may be passed without further inquiry.—*R. v. 2425. —.]—A person, deaf & dumb, was to be tried for a capital felony. The judge ordered a jury to be empanelled, to try whether he was mute by the visitation of God & the jury found that he was so. The jury were then sworn to try whether he was able to plead, which they found in the affirmative, & prisoner, by a sign, pleaded—Not Guilty. The judge then ordered the jury to be sworn to try whether prisoner was “now sane or not”; & on this question, his Lordship directed the jury to consider whether prisoner had sufficient intellect to comprehend the course of the proceedings, so as to make a proper defence, to challenge any juror he might wish to object to, & to comprehend the details of the evidence; & that if they thought he had not, they should find him not of sane mind.—R. v. ISRAEL (1847), 2 Cox, C. C. 263.

2427. —.]—A person deaf & dumb was to be tried for a misdemeanour. A jury was empanelled to try whether he was mute by the visitation of God, & on their finding that he was so, they were sworn to try if he was of sound mind, & on their finding that he was so, his counsel pleaded not guilty for him, & the trial proceeded in the usual manner, & the evidence was not interpreted to deft.—R. v. WHITEFIELD (1850), 3 Car. & Kir. 121.

2428. —.]—A prisoner when called upon to plead to an indictment, stood mute. A jury was empanelled, & sworn to try whether he was mute of malice or by the visitation of God. A verdict of mute of malice having been returned, the ct. ordered a plea of not guilty to be entered on the record.—R. v. SCHLETER (1866), 31 J. P. 119; 10 Cox, C. C. 409.

2429. —.]—A person deaf & dumb from four years of age was indicted for larceny from the person, & not answering when called upon to plead, the jury found prisoner “mute by the visitation of God.” The ct. then ordered a plea of not guilty to be entered, & the trial to proceed. A relation, who could in some degree communicate with prisoner by means of signs, was sworn to interpret the nature of the proceedings & the evidence, & the ct. assigned counsel to prisoner. At the conclusion of the case, after the summing up of the presiding judge, the jury found prisoner guilty, but in answer to a question left to them in the summing up, found that prisoner “was not capable of understanding, & as a fact had not understood, the nature of the proceedings”:—Held: the above finding showed that prisoner was at the time of the trial of non-sane mind, therefore the ct. ought to have discharged the jury, & ordered prisoner to be detained during Her Majesty’s pleasure, under Criminal Lunatics Act, 1800 (c. 94), s. 2; & the conviction was quashed.—*R. v. 2430. —.]—A prisoner who was totally deaf & could neither read nor write was arraigned for a felony. Upon being arraigned he stood mute, & a jury duly empanelled & sworn for the purpose found that he was mute by the visitation of God. The jury were sworn again to try whether he was capable of pleading to the indictment & they found that he was incapable of pleading to & taking his trial upon the indictment & of understanding & following the proceedings by reason of his inability to communicate with & be communicated with by others. Upon this finding the judge, acting under Criminal Lunatics Act, 1800 (c. 94), s. 2, ordered him to be kept in custody until His Majesty’s pleasure should be known:—Held: the finding amounted to a finding that prisoner was insane within the meaning of the Act, & the order was properly made.—*R. v. The judge ordered a jury to be sworn to try the question whether prisoner was able to plead. The jury found he was able to plead. The jury were then sworn to try whether prisoner was insane; they found he was sane. They were then sworn to try the question whether prisoner was so incapable of speaking as to be unable to communicate to his solr. the facts necessary to his own case; they found that, at the present time, he was not capable of speaking so as to be able to communicate such facts to his solr. The jury were then sworn to try whether this incapacity arose from his own unlawful act, & they found it did. The judge said after that finding he would not ask the jury whether the incapacity arose from the visitation of God. Prisoner then pleaded not guilty to the indictment, & the trial was adjourned to the next sessions.—R. v. HARRIS (1897), 61 J. P. 792.

2479. Partial quashing of indictment.]—An indictment cannot be quashed in part.

The ct. will not, on the application of deft., quash an indictment for perjury.—R. v. WITHERS (1849), 4 Cox, C. C. 17.

2480. —.]—An indictment was framed under Libel Act, 1843 (c. 96), ss. 4 & 5, whereas defts. were only committed under sect. 5 of the Act:—Held: the ct. would not quash the indictment, given in charge to the jury.—R. v. HOPKINS (1832), 1 Craw. & D. 184.—IR.

2472 i. Not too late after plea pleaded.]—The ct. can entertain a motion to quash an indictment at any time.—R. v. HOWES (1887), 5 Man. L. R. 339.—CAN.

q. Not after case for prosecution closed.]—An indictment will not be quashed after the case for the prosecution has closed.—R. v. HAYES & SLEVIN (1842), 2 Craw. & D. 499; 2 Leg. Rep. 386.—IR.

PART VII. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 4.—A.

2461 i. Before plea pleaded.]—Any objection to a defective indictment for any defect apparent on the face of it must be taken by demurrer or motion to quash the indictment before deft. has pleaded, & not afterwards.—R. v. FLYNN (1878), 2 P. & B. 321.—CAN.

2461 ii. —.]—Dft. was indicted & convicted for rape committed upon the person of W. Application was made to the trial judge on behalf of prisoner to reserve a case for the opinion of the ct. on the ground that it was not alleged in the indictment that the person upon whom the offence was committed was not the wife of prisoner:—Held: dft.'s counsel was obliged to take the objection before pleading to the indictment, & not having done so it was not open to him to take it subsequently.—R. v. WRIGHT (1906), 39 N. S. R. 103.—CAN.

not be charged with more than one offence in a particular count. If it is clear on the face of the indictment that a count contains more than one offence, & no objection is taken before plea, or if it is not clear, & evidence is attempted to be led, & no objection is taken, it is too late to raise the objection afterwards where there is no prejudice to the accused.—R. v. VIVIAN (1917), T. P. D. 588.—S. AF.

o. Before jury charged—Disagreement of jury—Effect of.]—Where deft. has had an opportunity to move to quash the indictment when the cause was called for trial, & before the jury was sworn, but has neglected to avail himself of it, he is put in no better position, as regards his application, by the jury failing to agree on a verdict & being discharged in consequence.—R. v. WALLACE (1868), 7 N. S. R. 382.—CAN.

but would quash so much of it as purported to charge deft. under sect. 4.—R. v. FELBERMANN & WILKINSON (1887), 51 J. P. 168.

2481. Discretion of court.]—It is in the discretion of the ct. whether they will quash any indictment whatever upon motion (per CUR.).—R. v. JOHNSON (1752), 1 Wils. 325; 95 E. R. 643.

2482. — Power of court of quarter sessions.]—An order of quarter sessions, brought up by certiorari, appeared to be an order quashing an indictment containing counts for forcible entries, assaults, & a riot. On motion to quash the order:—Held: the sessions, having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the indictment, had jurisdiction to quash it.—R. v. WILSON (1844), 8 Q. B. 620; a New Mag. Cas. 163; 1 New Sess. Cas. 427; 14 L. J. M. C. 3; 4 L. T. O. S. 153; 9 J. P. 167; 115 E. R. 233; sub nom. R. v. GLOUCESTERSHIRE J.J., R. v. WILSON, 8 Jur. 1069.

2483. — How exercised.]—This is an application made on behalf of defts. to quash the indictment or in the alternative to quash certain counts of the indictment. Such an application is one the granting of which is within certain limits in the discretion of the ct. If the ct. should be of opinion that the indictment is clearly bad, or that any counts in it are clearly bad, it would be the duty of the ct. to quash the one or the other as the case might be. If the matter were one of doubt, & if the language of the indictment or of certain counts in it were such as to cause embarrassment to defts. in their defence & to prejudice the fair trial of the case, then the ct. would have discretion to quash the indictment or such counts of it as might be necessary (LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.).—R. v. JAMESON, [1896] 2 Q. B. 425; 65 L. J. M. C. 218; 75 L. T. 77; 60 J. P. 662; 12 T. L. R. 551; 18 Cox, C. C. 392.

2484. — Not granted in case of doubt.]—On a motion to quash an indictment the ct. should not interfere where there is doubt (COLERIDGE, J.).—R. v. BURNBY (1843), 5 Q. B. 348; 1 Dav. & Mer. 362; 13 L. J. M. C. 29; 2 L. T. O. S. 73, 166; 8 J. P. 166; 8 Jur. 240; 114 E. R. 1280.

2485. — —.]—(1) When an indictment is found by a grand jury having no jurisdiction, it may be quashed at any stage, at the instance of deft., even after he has pleaded to it.

(2) Where there is any doubt as to its validity, the ct. will not decide the question upon motion, but will leave deft. to his writ of error.—R. v. HEANE (1864), 4 B. & S. 947; 3 New Rep. 466; 33 L. J. M. C. 115; 9 L. T. 719; 28 J. P. 500; 10 Jur. N. S. 724; 12 W. R. 417; 9 Cox, C. C. 433; 122 E. R. 714.

2486. — Lengthy argument not permitted.]—Counsel are not allowed to argue at length at nisi prius the invalidity of an indictment, tical.—The practice of quashing indictments, when there are two or more of them, is only applicable to cases where the charges which they contain are one & the same, but only presented in a different light, & not to cases where the charges are distinct & separate, even although they arise out of the same transaction.—ANON.

(1841), Ir. Cir. Rep. 165.—IR.

t. Presence of prosecutor on grand jury.]—Where one of the grand jurors, by whom an indictment for forcible entry & detainer was found at the sessions, was prosecutor, the indictment was quashed.—R. v. CUNARD (1838), Ber. 500.—CAN.

for the purpose of inducing the ct. to refuse to try it.—R. v. ABRAHAM (1830), 1 Mood. & R. 7, N. P.

2487. — Judge may refuse to try bad indictment.]—A jury sworn on an indictment clearly bad in point of law may be discharged by the judge from giving a verdict.—R. v. DEACON (1824), Ry. & M. 27, N. P.

2488. — —.]—A judge at nisi prius may refuse to try an indictment clearly bad in point of law.—R. v. TREMEARNE (1824), Ry. & M. 147, N. P.

2489. — —.]—An indictment for perjury committed in the Insolvent Debtor's Ct., alleged that deft. falsely, etc., swore "that his schedule presented to that ct. contained a full, true, & perfect account of all debts owing to him, whereas, in truth & in fact, the schedule did not contain a full, true & perfect account of all debts owing to him," without specifying any debts omitted:—Held: this indictment was clearly bad, & no trial ought to be had upon it.

I have no power to quash this indictment & I therefore order the case to be struck out of the list (ABBOTT, C.J.).—R. v. HEPPER (1825), 1 C. & P. 608; Ry. & M. 210, N. P.

2490. Ex officio information not quashed.]—An information by the A.-G. cannot be quashed, but if an information can be quashed it must be for something that appears on the record, & not for a matter extrinsic.—R. v. JOAKAM (1733), Sess. Cas. K. B. 70; 93 E. R. 71.

2491. — —.]—The ct. will not give leave to quash an information filed ex officio by the A.-G. He may stop the proceedings upon it by noli prosequi & file another.—R. v. STRATTON (1779), 1 Doug. K. B. 239; 21 State Tr. 1045; 99 E. R. 156.

2492. Quashing coroner's inquisition.]—A coroner's inquisition found that, on a day & at a place named, deceased being on board a steam-boat then floating & being navigated in a river, a boiler burst, whereby boiling water & coals were cast upon deceased, whereby deceased instantly died:—Held: the inquest must be quashed, because no time was sufficiently laid for the time of the explosion, or for that of the death.

Though the ct. will sometimes quash an inquisition on motion, for palpable defects, the most convenient course is to put the party contesting it to demur.—R. v. BROWNLOW (1839), 11 Ad. & El. 119; 8 Dowl. 157; 3 Per. & Dav. 52; 9 L. J. M. C. 15; 3 J. P. 722; 4 Jur. 103; 113 E. R. 358.

SUB-SECT. 5.—DEMURRER.

2535. Time for demurring — Before plea.—Objections to an indictment, which are within Criminal Law Act, 1826 (c. 64), ss. 20 & 21, must be taken by demurrer. It is too late to take them on the trial.—R. v. LAW (1839), 2 Mood. & R. 197, N. P.

2536. ———.]—Deft. in an indictment cannot, after plea, take advantage of any defect which is aided after verdict by Criminal Law Act, 1826 (c. 64), s. 21, the only mode of taking advantage of such defects being by demurrer.—R. v. ELLIS (1842), Car. & M. 564.

Annotation:—Refd. R. v. Spalding (1842), Car. & M. 568.

2537. ———.]—Withdrawal of plea for purpose of demurring.—Where prisoner in a case of felony has in the absence of his counsel pleaded to an indictment which is objectionable on demurrer, the judge will, on the application of prisoner's counsel, allow prisoner to demur before the evidence is gone into.

In a case of embezzlement, if prisoner demurs to the indictment, & the demurrer be decided against him, he may still plead over to the felony & take his trial.—R. v. PURCHASE (1842), Car. & M. 617.

Plea, that on, etc., in the fourth year of the reign of the present King, deft. was arraigned upon an indictment, which charged that deft. on Jan. 18, in the fifty-seventh year of the reign of the late King & on divers other days & times between that day & the day of taking the inquisition, kept a gaming-house, etc., to the nuisance of the subjects of the King & against the peace, etc. The plea then averred the identity of the offences described in the two indictments & the acquittal of deft. Upon demurrer to this plea concluding with a prayer of judgment of respondeas ouster:—Held: (1) the plea was bad because the indictment upon which the acquittal was alleged to have taken place, on the face of it, charged an offence committed in the reign of the late King; & it was not competent to deft. to show by averment that it was for the same offence as that charged in the indictment before the ct., because that would be in effect to contradict the record; (2) the Crown was entitled to final judgment, notwithstanding the form in which demurrer concluded.

2563. Plea must be voluntary act of accused.]

—R. v. NEALE (1846), 10 J. P. 170.

2564. — Unauthorised plea of attorney in absence of accused.]—A., an infant, was charged with maliciously injuring a window & a bell-pull, & being ill, told his father that he had broken the window, but not intentionally, & that there ought to be compensation. The father thereon went to attend the hearing. A., being unable to do so, & an attorney he consulted advising that through him pltf. should plead guilty, which the attorney did, there being no communication meanwhile with A., the justices convicted A., & sentenced him to imprisonment:—Held: the conviction ought to be quashed on the ground that neither the father nor attorney had authority from A. to plead guilty.—R. v. AVES (1871), 24 L. T. 64; 35 J. P. 533.

2565. — Withdrawal of previous plea.]—On a plea of not guilty there ought to be no suggestion by the ct. that that plea should be withdrawn or that there should be a plea of guilty.—R. v. KING (1920), 15 Cr. App. Rep. 13, C. C. A.

2566. Plea must not be ambiguous.]—In trespass of assault, battery & wounding, a plea of not guilty as to the vi et armis, & a justification molliter manus imposuit as to the residue were adjudged bad upon demurrer.—BARRET v. HEVESETT (1591), Cro. Eliz. 242; 78 E. R. 498.

2567. —]—Applt. was charged with being unlawfully in possession of a coining mould without lawful excuse. When called upon to plead, he said that he was guilty of having the mould in his possession. This was entered as a plea of guilty. Later, when sentence was about to be passed, applt. set up what he regarded as a lawful excuse for the possession of the mould. No effect was, however, given to this statement of applt., who was then sentenced:—Held: applt. had not pleaded guilty, no legal sentence had been passed, & the case must go back & applt. be called upon to plead to the indictment.—R. v. BAKER (1912), 28 T. L. R. 363; 7 Cr. App. Rep. 217; 76 J. P. Jo. 184, C. C. A.

2568. — Plea of not guilty entered if any doubt.]—Where a prisoner formally pleads guilty to a felony, but accompanies the plea by a statement disclaiming any felonious intention, it is the duty of the ct. to enter a plea of not guilty. Applt. pleaded guilty to a charge of receiving certain horses knowing them to have been feloniously stolen, & handed to the ct. a written statement which concluded with these words: "I am guilty of taking the horses not knowing them to have been stolen." A plea of "Guilty" was thereupon entered on the record, & sentence was passed:—Held: applt. had not pleaded guilty, & that no legal sentence had been passed; the case must go back, & applt. be called upon to plead afresh to the indictment.—R. v. INGLESON, [1915] 1 K. B. 512; 84 L. J. K. B. 280; 112 L. T. 313; 24 Cox, C. C. 527; 11 Cr. App. Rep. 21; 78 J. P. Jo. 521, C. C. A.

PART VII. SECT. 5, SUB-SECT. 1.

2563 i. Plea must be voluntary act of accused.]—If a prisoner persists in pleading guilty, it is not the judge's duty to enter a plea of not guilty merely because prisoner adds a statement which if proved might amount to a defence.—R. v. MARTIN (1904), 4 S. R. N. S. W. 720; 21 N. S. W. W. N. 233.—AUS.

m. Plea of guilty—What amounts to.]—In answer to a charge of frequenting a disorderly house, accused said: "I was there if that makes me guilty," & was convicted without any evidence being taken.—Held: such admission was not a plea of guilty & the conviction should therefore be quashed.—R. v. SWEET (1914), 29 W. L. R. 887; 7 W. W. R. 608; 19 D. L. R. 694; 23 Can. Crim. Cas. 272.—CAN.

n. — Murder.]—Accused, in answer to a charge of murder, stated he had killed his wife, but that he had done so in consequence of his having discovered her in an act of adultery on the previous day:—Held: such statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge, & it was the duty of the ct. to try whether the provocation therein disclosed was sufficiently grave & sudden to reduce the offence.—NETAI LUSKAR v. R. (1885), 1 L. R. 11 Calc. 410.—IND.

o. — — —.]—Accused, charged with the murder of his wife & infant son, in his confession, stated he had killed his wife because she had quarrelled with him & objected to go to another village where he proposed a change of house on account of their poverty. The sessions judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty on the charge of murder, convicted the accused, & sentenced him to death:—Held: accused's statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge of murdering his wife. He alleged a sudden provocation; he ought therefore to have been put on his trial, in order that the ct. might ascertain whether the provocation was grave & sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder.—

p. — To lesser crime than that charged.]—Prisoner, observing his father violently engaged in a row, which the latter had provoked, by drunken abusiveness & threats, in which he was being seriously assaulted, struck at the party assaulting, with his knife, which shortly deprived him of life. The grand jury found a verdict of wilful murder, & prisoner having pleaded guilty to the lesser crime of manslaughter:—Held: the Crown was justified in accepting the plea, & abandoning the charge of wilful murder. The act having been committed in defence of a parent, was a mitigating circumstance.—R. v. HOLLETT (1884), 7 Nfld. L. R. 29.—NFLD.

q. Plea of not guilty—Effect of.]—An accused who desires to plead autrefois acquit or autrefois convict may lose his right to do so by pleading not guilty when arraigned on the indictment.—R. v. HOLLAND (1914), 33 N. Z. L. R. 931.—N.Z.

2576. — After opening speech of prosecution.]—On the trial of an indictment for forgery against two prisoners, after the opening speech for prosecution one of them asked to be allowed to withdraw his plea of not guilty & to plead guilty. This was done & the plea of guilty was recorded. He was then examined as a witness on the part of the prosecution against his co-deft., & in the course of such examination he swore that he had no knowledge of the instrument in question being forged. Upon this he was allowed to withdraw his plea of guilty & to plead not guilty, the jury withdrawing their verdict.—R. v. CLOUTER & HEATH (1859), 8 Cox, C. C. 237.

2584. — Proceedings commenced out of time.]—C. was indicted for night poaching on Feb. 6, 1863. He pleaded guilty, but subsequently applied by his counsel for leave to withdraw the plea, & to move in arrest of judgment, upon the ground that the proceedings against him had not been commenced within twelve calendar months, as directed by Night Poaching Act, 1828 (c. 69), s. 4:—Held: the application to withdraw the plea was one which ought to be granted, & as no warrant & information was produced showing that proceedings had been commenced within twelve months, the objection was fatal.

2581 i. Time of application to withdraw plea of guilty—Not after sentence.]—After judgment, it is too late to apply to change a plea of guilty to one of not guilty, & even before judgment the ct. has a discretion in the matter.—R. v. O'BRIEN, [1918] 3 W. W. R. 848.—CAN.

r. — Not after jury charged.]—After prisoner had pleaded guilty in an indictment for false pretences, & had been given in charge to the jury, an application was made for liberty to withdraw the plea & to demur:—Held: prisoner having been given in charge, the plea could not be withdrawn.—BOURKE'S CASE (1841), 1 r. Cir. Rep. 191.—IR.

t. — —.]—Although an accused has pleaded guilty, yet if before the case is closed it clearly appears that the accused never intended to admit the truth of a fact which is an essential ingredient in his guilt & therefore, pleaded guilty under a misapprehension of what constitutes guilt, it is the duty of the presiding judge or magistrate to offer to allow him to withdraw his plea, if he wishes to do so, & to enter a plea of not guilty.—R. v. RICHMOND, [1917] 2 W. W. R. 1200; 29 Can. Crim. Cas. 89.—CAN.

a. — —.]—Prisoners, under the misapprehension that they were merely repeating the confession they made when they pleaded guilty before the magistrate, pleaded guilty in the Supreme Ct. to a count in an indictment charging them with the same offence to which they had previously pleaded. This was discovered prior to sentence:—Held: the ct. had jurisdiction, as sentence had not been pronounced, to amend the second pleas by entering pleas of autrefois convict, & to record judgment on those pleas for the accused.—R. v. SMITH, R. v. KING (1911), 31 N. Z. L. R. 352.—N.Z.

b. — —.]—Two persons, who were charged with theft by house-breaking & with being habitual criminals, pleaded guilty to the charge of theft & admitted that they were habitual criminals, & were sentenced to terms of penal servitude & preventive detention, one having asked, & been refused, leave to withdraw his admission that he was a habitual criminal. Accused appealed & asked leave to withdraw their pleas to the charge of habitual criminality, alleging that in pleading guilty they believed that they were merely admitting that the list of previous convictions annexed to the indictment was correct, & did not understand the nature of the charge & the penal consequences that it involved:—Held: as the procedure had been regular throughout, & the accused had been advised by law agents, their allegations as to their misunderstanding of the charge could not be accepted as grounds for allowing the plea to be withdrawn.—PAUL v. H.M. ADVOCATE, KNOX v. H.M. ADVOCATE, [1914] 5 C. (J.) 69.—SCOT.

c. Substitution of plea.]—Prisoner having pleaded not guilty to an indictment for feloniously stabbing, cannot withdraw that plea, & submit to a common assault; but the jury may acquit of the felony, & find him guilty of the assault.—MOORE'S CASE (1842), 1 r. Cir. Rep. 653.—IR.

d. — —.]—A party indicted for murder, to which he has pleaded not guilty, will not be permitted to withdraw such plea, & to plead guilty of manslaughter.—CORDIAL'S CASE (1841), 1 r. Cir. Rep. 312.—IR.

e. Facts in indictment compatible with innocence.]—Where accused pleads guilty to a charge, & it appears that the indictment alleges only facts which might or might not amount to the offence, the plea of guilty will be struck out.—R. v. LABOURDETTE (1908), 13 B. C. R. 443.—CAN.

SECT. 6.—POSTPONEMENT OF TRIAL.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

2585. Civil proceedings pending.]—Pending a suit in the spiritual ct., touching the validity of a will, an indictment for forging it ought not to be tried.—R. v. RHODES (1726), 2 Stra. 703; 93 E. R. 795.

Annotation:—Mentd. R. v. Nunez (1736), Lee temp. Hard. 265.

2586. Witnesses not appearing—Bound over to a subsequent session.]—A comr. of gaol delivery may, at his discretion, discharge or continue on their commitments in gaol, prisoners committed for trial, but against whom the witnesses do not appear, being bound over to a subsequent session.—ANON. (1810), Russ. & Ry. 173, C. C. R.

2587. — Material witness in charge of rape.]—In charge for a rape, prisoner will be ordered to be detained till the next assizes, on the application for the postponement of his trial. In consequence of the absence of a material witness.—R. v. BILLINGHAM (1837), 7 C. & P. 800, n.

2588. To instruct witness as to nature of oath.]—A person who has no notion of eternity or of a future state of reward & punishment cannot be examined as a witness, but the trial may be postponed until the witness is instructed in the nature of this obligation.—R. v. WHITE (1786), 1 Leach, 430.

Annotations:—N.F. R. v. Hall (1849), 14 J. P. 25. Refd. Maden v. Catanach (1861), 7 H. & N. 360.

2589. —.]—Where a child, tendered as a witness for the prosecution, is so ignorant of the nature of an oath as to be incompetent to give evidence, the trial will not be postponed, at least after the jury are charged, in order that such child may be instructed.

Semble: if the jury has not been charged, the trial should not, for such a purpose be postponed.—R. v. HALL (1849), 14 J. P. 25.

2590. —.]—Where the material witness against prisoner was not sufficiently acquainted with the nature & obligation of an oath, & this appeared as soon as the jury was charged, & before any evidence given:—Held: the discharge of the jury was improper, & an acquittal should have been directed.—R. v. WADE (1825), 1 Mood. C. C. 86, C. C. R.

Annotations:—Refd. R. v. Charlesworth (1861), 1 B. & S. 460; R. v. Hollinrake Whitehead (1866), 14 W. R. 677.

2591. —.]—The ct. will not postpone a trial in order that a witness only six years of age, & too young to comprehend the meaning of an oath, may be instructed. Semble: it would be otherwise if the incompetency arose from want of education, & not from immaturity.—R. v. NICHOLAS (1846), 2 Car. & Kir. 246; 2 Cox, C. C. 136.

2592. —.]—Where a bill for rape on a child under the age of 10 years had been ignored by the grand jury in consequence of the judge refusing to allow the child to be sworn as a witness, on the ground of its want of knowledge of the obligation of an oath, prisoner was ordered to be detained in custody until the child could be properly instructed.—R. v. BAYLIS (1849), 13 L. T. O. S. 509; 4 Cox, C. C. 23.

2593. —.]—Upon a charge of gross indecency committed with a boy eight years of age & of assault on the same boy, the boy cannot give evidence except on oath. The ct., being satisfied that the boy did not understand the nature or meaning of an oath, adjourned the case for the purpose of the boy receiving some religious instruction & of being taught the meaning of an oath.—R. v. Cox (1898), 62 J. P. 89.

2594. Illness of witness before grand jury.]—Where it was stated by the grand jury on their returning a true bill for murder that an important witness was too ill to give evidence in ct., the judge directed two surgeons to see the witness, & on their stating on the voire dire that the witness was too ill to give evidence in ct., the judge ordered the trial to be postponed to the next assizes & prisoner to be detained in custody.—R. v. CHAPMAN (1838), 8 C. & P. 558.

Annotations:—Refd. R. v. Guttridge (1840), 9 C. & P. 228. Mentd. R. v. Sealife (1841), 9 Dowl. 553; R. v. Andrews (1844), 2 Dow. & L. 10.

2595. Several postponements—Application for discharge—Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (c. 2), s. 7.]—R. v. BOWEN, No. 2600, post.

2596. —.]—Where the trial of prisoners had been successively postponed for two assizes, in consequence of the absence of a material witness, & the affidavit, on which application was made for further postponement, stated, that the witness in question was believed to have gone to India as a soldier, so that there was not any prospect of his soon return, the judge ordered the recognisances of prosecutor to be discharged, & discharged prisoners without compelling them to enter into any recognisances for their future appearance.—R. v. BRIDGMAN (1841), Car. & M. 271; previous proceedings (1840), 4 J. P. 557.

SUB-SECT. 2.—GROUNDS FOR POSTPONEMENT.

A. On Application of Prosecution.

2597. Absence of material witness—Through illness.]—If, in a case of felony, a witness for the prosecution is too ill to attend the assizes, this is a good ground for postponing the trial, but will not authorise the reading of the deposition of the witness taken before the magistrate.—R. v. SAVAGE (1831), 5 C. & P. 143; 1 Nev. & M. M. C. 286.

Annotations:—Refd. R. v. Austen (1856), 7 Cox, C. C. 55. Mentd. R. v. Middleton (1873), L. R. 2 C. C. R. 38.

PART VII. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 1.

f. Witness not appearing.]—Although the Crown elects to proceed with a speedy trial in the absence of a material witness, & although the trial has commenced, the ct. has power to grant an adjournment to enable the witness to be produced.—R. v. GORDON (1898), 6 B. C. R. 160.—CAN.

g. — Application after jury sworn.]—Prisoner indicted for felony, challenged two jurors peremptorily, & after a full jury had been sworn, but before he was given in charge, prisoner applied for postponement of trial, on ground of absence of material witness:—Held: application was not too late, but prisoner was bound to account for the delay.—R. v. DOWNEY (1845), 3 Craw. & D. 314.—IR.

k. After jury charged—Felony.]—A trial cannot be postponed after prisoner has been given in charge for a felony.—R. v. HOPES (1835), 1 Craw. & D. 169, n.—IR.

l. Crime committed in another county.]—Semble: the judge at the trial should in the exercise of his judicial discretion postpone the case, to enable the trial to take place in the county where a view of the locus in quo could conveniently be had.—R. v. McNAMARA (1878), 14 Cox, C. C. 229.—IR.

m. Order for postponement recalled —Production of absent witness.]—A judge presiding at the assizes has power, during the sitting, to recall his order postponing the trial of a prisoner till the next assizes, & to order the trial to proceed, the absent witness, upon whose account the order for postponement was made, having been produced.—R. v. REDD (1911), 20 W. L. R. 645; 21 Man. L. R. 785.—CAN.

PART VII. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.

n. Absence of material witness—Necessity for affidavit.]—An application to postpone a trial in consequence of the absence of witnesses must be supported by special affidavit, showing that the witnesses in question are 2598. — — —.]—The presentment of a bill for a capital offence may be postponed on affidavit of the attorney for the prosecution stating the illness of a material & necessary witness, although such witness have been examined before a magistrate, & his deposition do not disclose matter of sufficient importance to show that his evidence was necessary, as the important facts may have been discovered since.—R. v. PALMER (1834), 6 C. & P. 652.

Annotation :—Refd. R. v. Heeson (1878), 14 Cox, C. C. 40.

2599. — — —.]—Where a trial for felony is postponed on the application of counsel for the prosecution, on the ground of the absence of a material witness, it is in the discretion of the judge whether, on consideration of the circumstances of each particular case, he will order prisoner to be detained till the next assizes, or admit him to bail, or discharge him on his own recognisance.—R. v. OSBORN (1837), 7 C. & P. 799.

Annotation :—Refd. R. v. Austen (1856), 7 Cox, C. C. 55.

2600. — — —.]—Before the spring assizes, 1840, A. was committed to take his trial at those assizes for shooting B. The trial was postponed to the summer assizes, on the ground, that B. was too ill from his wounds to be able to attend to give evidence. Before the summer assizes B. died, & at those assizes a true bill for the murder of B. was found against A., & application was made on the part of the prosecution to postpone the trial to the next spring assizes, on the ground of the illness of a material witness :—Held : the application should be granted, & A. was not entitled to his discharge under Habeas Corpus Act.—R. v. BOWEN (1840), 9 C. & P. 509.

2601. — — —.]—Upon motion by the prosecution in a case of felony, to put off the trial, on the ground of the absence of a material witness, who has not made a deposition before the committing magistrate, the judge will require an affidavit stating what points the witness is expected to prove, in order that he may form a judgment as to the witness being material or not.

An affidavit of a surgeon, that a witness is the mother of an unweaned child which is afflicted with inflammation of the lungs, & that the child could neither be brought to the assize town nor separated from its mother without danger to its life, is sufficient ground for the absence of the witness, in order to found a motion to postpone the trial.—R. v. SAVAGE (1843), 1 Car. & Kir. 75.

2603. — — —.]—A trial for murder was put off until the next assizes, upon an application on the part of the prosecution, on the ground of the inability of a material witness to attend, although the witness was not examined before the magistrates, there being an affidavit of a medical man as to an injury to the witness, rendering it, in his opinion, unsafe that he should travel. & this, even after the trial had been appointed for a particular day.—R. v. LAWRENCE (1866), 4 F. & F. 901.

material.—R. v. DOUGALL (1874), 18 L. C. J. 85.—CAN.

o. — — — On private business.—A trial for forgery might be postponed in the absence of prosecutor, a material witness, on his private affairs.—R. v. M'CONVILLE (1837), 1 Craw. & D. 170, n.—IR.

p. Discretion of court.—Pltf., having been committed to gaol for trial on a charge of unlawfully & forcibly kidnapping & taking one B. without authority, with intent to transport him out of Canada against his will, was, on June 24, 1872, brought before the county judge, by whom he consented to be tried. The judge fixed July 3 for the trial, & on that day prisoner said he was ready, but upon the request of counsel for the Crown the trial was postponed till July 15, when prisoner was found guilty on both counts :—Held : the judge had power to postpone the trial, & the record was not defective in not stating the cause of the adjournment.—CORNWALL v. R. (1872), 33 U. C. R. 106.—CAN.

q. — — —.]—When an indictment for felony has been found against a 2604. — — — Kept away by accused.—If it be moved on the part of the prosecution in a case of felony to postpone the trial on the ground of the absence of a material witness, the practice, where the absence of the witness can be traced to the acts of prisoner or his friends, is not to discharge prisoner from custody except on very sufficient bail, but where no collusion appears between the absent witness & prisoner or his friends, the practice is to discharge prisoner on his own recognisance.—R. v. BEARDMORE (1836), 7 C. & P. 497.

2605. — — —.]—In the absence of a material witness, & on its appearing by affidavit that he had applied to prosecutor to know if the matter could not be settled without a trial, & that money should not be wanting if it could, the judge directed the trial to be postponed, & prisoner remanded till the next assizes, unless he found sureties for his appearance & gave seven days' notice of bail.—R. v. PARISH (1837), 7 C. & P. 782.

2606. — — —.]—A true bill was found against several prisoners for a rape. Prisoners had been on bail, & prosecutrix did not appear either before the grand jury, or to give evidence on the trial, & an application being made to the judge to postpone the trial, founded on affidavit, stating, that in the belief of deponent, prosecutrix was kept out of the way in consequence of money having been given to her by some of the prisoners, the judge postponed the trial, & would not admit prisoners to bail.—R. v. GUTTRIDGE (1840), 9 C. & P. 228.

Annotations :—Refd. R. v. Scalfie (1841), 9 Dowl. 553; R. v. Andrews (1844), 2 Dow. & L. 10.

2607. — — — Absence abroad.—If the trial of a prisoner indicted for felony be postponed, on the ground of the absence from England of prosecutor who is a material witness for the prosecution, prisoner will not be allowed his costs, but the judge will discharge him on his own recognisance.—R. v. CROWE (1829), 4 C. & P. 251.

2608. — — —.]—Where it was sworn that a material witness for the prosecution, who had previously been in attendance, had absconded during the assizes, as it was believed for the purpose of avoiding giving evidence upon the trial, & that every effort had been made to discover where he was gone & to secure his attendance :—Held : this was sufficient to justify a postponement of the trial, although it was not sworn that the witness had absconded by the procurement or contrivance of prisoners, or either of them, or that prosecutor would be enabled to produce the witness at the next assizes.

Although in ordinary cases, upon indictments for murder, the ct., upon postponing the trial, will continue prisoner in custody, yet if it appear tolerably clearly, upon the face of the depositions, that the offence amounts only to manslaughter, the ct. will depart from this rule & suffer prisoner to be discharged from custody upon his entering into his own recognisance, with sufficient sureties to appear & take his trial. But on a serious prisoner at one assizes, there is no prerogative or absolute right in the Crown to postpone the trial; such postponement is the act of the ct., in the exercise of its discretion.—R. v. M'CAHILL (1859), 11 I. C. L. R. 188; 11 Ir. Jur. 249.—IR.

r. — — — No substantial reason for postponement.—The ct. will exercise a discretionary power in allowing the Crown to postpone trials, when bills have been found a considerable time, & the trial more than once postponed. Therefore, where indictments were pending against the prisoner for three charge of this nature, the ct. will not discharge prisoner upon his own recognisance merely.—R. v. BRIDGEMAN (1840), 4 J. P. 557; subsequent proceedings (1841), Car. & M. 271.

2609. — Absence from home—Impossibility of communication.]—On an indictment for bribery, the trial was, on the application of prosecutor, postponed to the next assizes on account of the absence of material evidence of the town clerk, who was away from home. It was not known when he would return, nor was it possible to communicate with him in time.—R. v. MOBBS (1860), 2 F. & F. 18.

2610. — Danger of spreading infectious disease by witnesses' attendance.]—Postponement of a case was allowed on the ground that infection might be conveyed to the public by the attendance of witnesses.—R. v. TAYLOR (1882), 15 Cox, C. C. 8.

2611. Local prejudice created by accused.]—A criminal information having been granted against deft., he, before the trial at nisi prius, distributed handbills in the assize town, vindicating his own conduct, & reflecting on prosecutor's. This matter being disclosed to the judge at nisi prius by an affidavit:—Held: this was sufficient ground to put off the trial.—R. v. JOLLIFFE (1791), 4 Term Rep. 285; 100 E. R. 1022.

Annotations.—Mentd. R. v. Willett (1795), 6 Term Rep. 294; Spencely v. De Willott (1806), 3 Smith, K. B. 321; Ex p. Fernandez (1861), 10 C. B. N. S. 3; Re Fernandes (1861), 6 H. & N. 717; Dixon v. Farrer (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 658; R. v. Tibbits, [1902] 1 K. B. 77.

2612. After acquittal on one indictment—Further indictments to be tried.]—Semble: where there are several indictments against prisoners, on all of which they have been arraigned, prosecutor having tried some of the indictments, & failed in obtaining a conviction, ought not to be allowed to postpone the trial of the remaining cases till the next session.—R. v. FULLER (1839), 9 C. & P. 35.

2613. Where fresh counts are added to indictment.]—When counsel for the prosecution has obtained leave to add a count to an indictment, on the ground that the indictment as framed will not enable him to disclose all the facts of the transaction, deft. cannot claim to be tried at once upon the indictment already preferred, & the trial must be postponed.—R. v. STONE (1858), 1 F. & F. 310.

2614. Where further charges are pending.]—Upon a charge of murder by poison, the presentment of a bill to the grand jury cannot be postponed to the next assizes on the ground that other & like charges may, before that time, be brought against prisoner & if no bill is so presented prisoner is entitled to be discharged.—R. v. HEESON (1878), 14 Cox, C. C. 40.

2615. To give notice to accused under Prevention of Crime Act, 1903 (c. 59).]—Objection that proper notices under sect. 10 (4) (b) of above Act have not been given, must be taken at the trial, that the trial may, if necessary, be postponed.—R. v. WESTON (1909), as reported in 3 Cr. App. Rep. 53, C. C. A.

Annotation.—Mentd. R. v. Smith (1909), 3 Cr. App. Rep. 40.

2616. To obtain further evidence.]—Counsel for the prosecution moved to put off a trial for murder till it could be ascertained whether the Crown would pardon a person convicted of bigamy to whom it was alleged one of the prisoners had made an important statement:—Held: postponement would be granted.—R. v. OWEN (1839), 9 C. & P. 83.

2618. —.]—Deft., on an information for a misdemeanour, is entitled, on pleading, to an imparlance until the next term.—ANON. (1702), 11 Mod. Rep. 5; 88 E. R. 847.

2619. To put special plea into formal shape.]—R. v. CHAMBERLAIN, No. 2402, ante.

2620. To prepare defence.]—R. v. KENNEDY (1854), 18 J. P. Jo. 261.

2621. —.]—The trial of a prisoner for murder, he having been only committed for trial about a week before the assizes, was postponed upon his own application to the ensuing assizes, upon affidavits by a near relative of prisoner, of various facts which, it was suggested, might sustain the defence of insanity, supported by an affidavit of the attorney that there had not been time to obtain witnesses for the defence.—R. v. LONGHURST (1866), 4 F. & F. 969; 10 Cox, C. C. 353.

2622. —.]—Even upon an indictment recently found against a soldier for murder, & removed into the Central Criminal Ct. for the purpose of a more speedy trial, on an affidavit by prisoner's attorney, the case being of recent occurrence, that he had not sufficient time to prepare the defence, & suggesting the possibility of a defence, the trial was postponed.—R. v. TAYLOR (1869), 11 Cox, C. C. 340.

2623. — Fresh evidence adduced by prosecution.]—An application, on behalf of the defence, to postpone the trial of a prisoner charged with murder, in order to afford an opportunity of investigating the evidence & characters of certain witnesses who had not been examined before the committing magistrate, but who were to be called for the prosecution to prove previous attempts by years, & the counsel for the Crown alleged no reason for not proceeding to trial, except that they were not ready, the ct. refused to postpone the trial.—BYRNE'S & GILMORE'S CASE (1841), Ir. Clr. Rep. 68.—IR.

s. — Absence of witness.]—In a criminal trial, one of the witnesses for the prosecution was not forthcoming. An application, on the part of the Crown, that the trial should be suspended, & the jury put aside, to await the arrival of the absent witness, was refused.—R. v. MITCHELL (1840), 2 Caw. & D. 71.—IR.

t. — Second postponement.]—A judge of assize has power on the application of the Crown & notwithstanding prisoner's demand for an immediate trial, to postpone such a trial a second time after bill found by the grand jury, without ordering prisoner's release in bail, if satisfied that such postponement is necessary in order to secure the ends of justice.—R. v. DRIPPS (1874), 13 Cox, C. C. 25.—IR.

PART VII. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 2.—B.

a. In general.]—During a special term of the Supreme Ct. holden for special business a true bill was found against the accused. Upon application for postponement of trial on several grounds:—Held: it being a special term was sufficient to concede to the motion for postponement. Want of time to prepare defence, absence of witnesses, & illness of accused, are good grounds why the Crown should not force accused to trial.—R. v. PARNELL (1889), 7 Nfld. L. R. 402.—NFLD.

2623 i. To prepare defence—Fresh evidence adduced by prosecution.]—Prisoner was charged with murder. His counsel was informed by counsel for the Crown that the Crown intended to give in evidence the testimony of two men who had not been examined at the preliminary hearing before the magistrate. A résumé of the evidence which would probably be given by these two men was then handed to prisoner's counsel, who thereupon applied for a postponement of the trial to the next assizes at C., to be held six or seven months later, on the ground that prisoner was taken by surprise by the introduction of the new evidence. A statement of counsel for prisoner of the grounds for a postponement was accepted by the ct., in lieu of an affidavit. There was no assertion that the evidence which the accused on the life of the deceased, was refused.—R. v. JOHNSON (1847), 2 Car. & Kir. 354.

2624. — — —.]—The production of fresh evidence on behalf of the prosecution, not known, or forthcoming, at the preliminary investigation, & not, previously to the trial, communicated to the other side, may be ground for a postponement of the trial if it appears necessary to justice.—R. v. FLANNAGAN & HIGGINS (1884), 15 Cox, C. C. 403.

2625. — — —.]—No copy of depositions in possession of defence.—A prisoner had been committed on a charge of high treason, & afterwards the grand jury returned a true bill against him with others for feloniously demolishing a house, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 8. He pleaded to that indictment, & wished to be tried after the other prisoners, who were indicted with him for feloniously demolishing the house, on the ground that he had had no copy of depositions as to the charge:—Held: the application could not be allowed, as the prosecution might have been commenced without going before any magistrate, & then there would have been no depositions.—R. v. SIMPSON (1842), Car. & M. 669; 4 State Tr. N. S. 1387.

o. — —.]—Waiver of privilege—Discretion of judge.]—On the trial of a prisoner for murder, after the jurymen had retired to consider their verdict, they sent a message to the judge that they wished to know whether the foreman could have a private hearing with the judge or the Crown attorney. The request was communicated by the judge to counsel for the Crown & for prisoner, & after discussion, it was agreed & consented to by both counsel that the judge should visit the jury in their room, unaccompanied by counsel, but taking with him the registrar & the ct. stenographer. This arrangement was carried out, & the judge in the jury room gave further instruction to the jury in answer to a question put by one of the jurymen. The proceedings in the jury room were recorded by the stenographer. A verdict of guilty was then given. Upon a case stated by the judge for the opinion of the ct.:—Held: prisoner had the privilege of being present during the whole of the trial, but he might waive that privilege & the waiver by his counsel, in his presence & acted upon, was his waiver; also there was substantially a permission by the judge for the prisoner to be out of ct. during the time of the proceedings in the jury room.—R. v. WANKLYN, R. v. VAUGHAN (1838), 8 C. & P. 290.

SUB-SECT. 5.—TRIAL OF FOREIGNER.

2677. Interpretation of evidence.]—When a foreigner who is ignorant of the English language is on trial on an indictment for a criminal offence, & is not defended by counsel, the evidence given at the trial must be translated to him, & compliance with this rule cannot be waived by prisoner. If he is defended by counsel, the evidence must be translated to him unless he or his counsel express a wish to dispense with the translation & the judge thinks fit to permit the omission, but the judge should not permit it unless he is of opinion that the accused substantially understands the nature of the evidence which is going to be given against him.—R. v. LEE KUN, [1916] 1 K. B. 387; 85 L. J. K. B. 515; 114 L. T. 421; 80 J. P. 166; 32 T. L. R. 225; 60 Sol. Jo. 158; 25 Cox, C. C. 304; 11 Cr. App. Rep. 293, C. C. A.

a. Bad character of interpreter—Not necessarily a disqualification.]—An interpreter was sworn, who interpreted the statements of the witnesses to the ct. The interpreter was objected to by counsel for prisoners on account of his bad character, & the judge was not satisfied with the manner in which he performed his duties; but there was nothing to show that the interpreter had dishonestly performed his duties, or had been guilty of misinterpretation of the evidence.—Held: no substantial wrong or miscarriage was occasioned by continuing the trial with this interpreter.—R. v. WALKER & CHINLEY (1910), 13 W. L. R. 47.—CAN.

t. Translation of evidence—Not necessarily literal—Discretion of court.]—There is no rule requiring a literal translation of everything that takes place at a trial to be given to or furnished prisoners speaking a foreign language only. The interpretation of the evidence is a matter for the judge, always being careful that prisoners suffer no prejudice, & where it appears that all proper precautions were taken & that prisoners suffered no prejudice, the conviction will not be set aside because there has not been a literal

a. —.]—Prisoner, a foreigner, was tried for perjury committed when giving testimony upon the trial of two other men upon a criminal charge. Prisoner's testimony at that trial was interpreted to the ct., & taken down from the lips of the interpreter by the ct. stenographer. At the trial of prisoner, the stenographer produced his transcript of what he had taken down. The interpreter was also called, & swore that there were some things that he did not give to the stenographer, things that had no relevancy; but that he gave the substance of it fully & faithfully.—Held: this, in the absence of satisfactory & clear evidence that something material had been left out or improperly put in, was sufficient to prove what took place at the first trial.—R. v. BOAGH SINGH (1913), 24 W. L. R. 941.—CAN.

b. Charge not understood—Sufficiency of interpretation.]—Deft. was convicted for keeping a disorderly house. Upon an application for a habeas corpus & a certiorari in aid:—Held: the proceedings were not bad because of deft., who was a foreigner, not understanding the nature of the charge & not making his plea with a knowledge of its meaning; the evidence showed that he understood & was fully advised.—R. v. MAH SAM (1910), 15 W. L. R. 666; 4 Sask. L. R. 84.—CAN.

c. Where translation not applied for—Accused defended by counsel.]—A conviction for murder will not be set aside because the evidence of witnesses for the prosecution given in a language of which deft. was ignorant was not translated to him, where he was defended by counsel speaking & thoroughly acquainted with the language of the witnesses, & where neither deft. nor his counsel asked that the evidence be translated.—R. v. LONG (1902), Q. R. 11 K. B. 328.—CAN.

d. —.]—On a trial for felony, the evidence for the prosecution being given in a language of which prisoners were wholly ignorant, was not translated to them:—Held: the conviction must be quashed, & it made no difference that the prisoners were defended by counsel, & that counsel had not asked for the evidence to be translated.—R. v. KROOK LEONG (1909), 4 Hong Kong, 161.—HONG KONG.

e. Evidence not translated—Misdemeanour.]—A foreigner charged with felony properly pleaded to the indictment, which was interpreted to him by an interpreter chosen by himself & duly sworn. The foreigner was defended by counsel. The conviction was of misdemeanour only. After verdict it appeared that the interpreter had not interpreted any of the evidence to the prisoner:—Held: as the conviction was of misdemeanour, there had been no mistrial, & the verdict must stand. Qu.: whether the same result would have followed had the conviction been for felony.—R. v. FONG CHONG (1888), 6 N. Z. L. R. 374.—N.Z.

f. Discretion of judge.]—Deft. attempted to show by affidavits that, not understanding English, he did not know that he was on trial, & did not understand the evidence given. This was contradicted by one who was sworn as an interpreter at the trial, & by a policeman:—Held: the capacity of the interpreter & all matters connected with the interpretation of the evidence were questions for the judge.—R. v. MECKLETT (1909), 18 O. L. R. 408; 13 O. W. R. 1039.—CAN.

The judge being of opinion that there had been nothing in the witness's demeanour, or in the way he had given his evidence, to show that he was hostile, refused to look at the affidavit. If a witness for a prosecution disprove prosecutor's case, prosecutor may call other witnesses to prove the facts denied by the former witness, & thus incidentally contradict that witness & show him to be unworthy of credit; but prosecutor cannot adduce any evidence not otherwise admissible for the sole purpose of discrediting his own witness.—R. v. BALL (1839), 8 C. & P. 745.

2748. ———.]—At a letting of lands, the terms of letting were read from a printed paper, & a party present agreed to take certain premises from Lady Day then next, when the lease of the then tenant would expire. No writing was signed by the parties or their agents, but there was at the foot of the printed paper a memorandum, also read over to the future tenant, stating that the parties had agreed to let & to take, subject to the printed terms, the name of the farm & the rent, & that the letting was for one year certain from Lady Day, & so from year to year, till notice to quit. Some of the terms were special, having relation to husbandry. The new tenant entered at Lady Day, & paid rent:—Held: on the trial of an action by the landlord against the tenant the paper above mentioned might be referred to, to refresh the memory of a witness as to such stipulations.—*BOLTON (LORD) v. 2807. Depositions irregularly taken—Answer omitted—Cross-examination as to question—Depositions not put in.]—Witnesses before a committing magistrate were duly sworn & examined, & cross-examined by prisoners; minutes thereof were duly made by the clerk, & were then sent to his office to be copied as draft depositions. The witnesses attended there also. T., the copying clerk, while copying the minutes, asked the witnesses some questions for the purpose of making the depositions more correct, clear & complete, & inserted the answers in the depositions. Prisoners were not present. The depositions thus written were taken back to the magistrate. The witnesses in the presence of prisoners, after being duly re-sworn, & after hearing the depositions read over to them, & giving prisoners full opportunity of cross-examination, signed them. The above circumstances appeared at the trial, & a material question was put to one of the witnesses as to something which he had said to T., in answer to one of the above questions so put to him by T. It was objected & ruled that the answer would appear on the depositions, & that they must, therefore, be put in as primary evidence of the statement:—Held: the question was legal, & the answer formed no part of the depositions, but was wholly independent of them, & ought, therefore, to have been given, & the depositions need not be put in.—*R. v. 2841. All must be in attendance.—The judges have laid down a rule, that a prosecutor is not bound to call witnesses merely because their names are on the back of the indictment, but the prosecution ought to have all such witnesses in ct., so that they may be called for the defence, if they are wanted for that purpose. If, however, they are called for the defence, the person calling them makes them his own witnesses.—R. v. WOODHEAD (1847), 2 Car. & Kir. 520.

The judge, when summing up, directed the jury to disregard the contents of the letters, as they were not in evidence. The Ct. of Criminal Appeal refused to interfere with the verdict on this ground.—R. v. REEVE (1917), 17 S. R. N. S. W. 81; 34 N. S. W. W. N. 123.—AUS.

The subject was not brought to the attention of the jury in any other way, nor did the trial judge refer to it in his summing up; nor was the charge objected to by either side:—Held: counsel for the Crown should not have in his opening indicated evidence of such gravity which he subsequently was unable to submit to the ct. & jury.—*R. v. The injuries which resulted in the death of D. were inflicted by prisoner on Dec. 18, 1867; D., his wife, died on Dec. 23; but Q., prisoner, was not taken into custody till Jan. 3, 1868. On Dec. 22, 1867, the day before D., the wife, died, D. made a statement which was taken down in writing in the presence of the magistrate.

At the trial it was proposed on behalf of the prosecution to give this statement in evidence under above Act, which section provides that whenever it is made to appear to the satisfaction of a magistrate that any person dangerously ill, & in the opinion of a registered medical man not likely to recover, is able to give material information, & it shall not be practicable to take the examination in accordance with Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (c. 42), s. 17, it shall be lawful for the justice to take in writing the statement on oath of such person, etc., & if on the trial such person be dead, it may be read, provided it be proved to the satisfaction of the ct. that notice of the intention to take such statement has been served upon the person against whom it is proposed to be read in evidence, & he had, or might have had, an opportunity of cross-examining the deceased person who made the statement:—Held: the proviso overrode the whole section, & the statement could not be read in evidence without proof of notice having been given to the accused, before it was taken; & the statute could have no operation in the case of a deposition taken while the accused person was keeping out of the way, as the notice was required to be given to the accused before the taking of the statement, & not simply before the reading of it.—R. v. QUIGLEY (1868), 18 L. T. 211.

Prisoner had been present at the coroner's inquest & had been represented there by a solr., who had cross-examined the witness in question. The deposition of this witness as taken by the coroner contained statements made to the witness
